and Service of God America's Underpinning Is Unraveling

By Dr. Joy Martinez

The phrase "separation of church and state" appears nowhere in the Constitution. However, I can't remember a gathering of families or pseudopolitical-experts in recent history where the argument around the founders' intention to include or exclude faith and religion from the nation's identity hasn't come up.

The truth is, faith and religion

The truth is, faith and religion in the second role in have played a significant role in shaping the United States since its inception. Over time, there have been shifts in religious practices and beliefs, which have had a significant impact on ethics, morals, and our behaviors as a community.

While Congress is prohibited from enacting a state religion, the founding document says nothing about banishing religion from the public square. Historically, the demographics of the United States has made it a predominantly Christian nation since its founding, with Protestantism being the dominant faith tradition. However, in recent years, there has been a significant shift in religious practices and beliefs. According to a Pew Research Center study, the number of Americans who identify as Christians has decreased from 78 percent in 2007 to 63 percent in 2021. This decline in Christian affiliation is driven by a growing number of people who identify as religiously unaffiliated, also known as "nones.' The rise of the "nones" is particularly pronounced among younger generations. According to a 2020 Pew Research Center and 49 percent of Generation Z identify as religiously unaffiliated. The decline in affiliation has also been accompanied by a shift in beliefs. In 2019 another Pew Research Center study found that a growing number of Americans believe in non-traditional spiritual practices, such as astrology, psychics, and reincarnation.

This shift in religious beliefs and practices has had a significant impact on the ethical and moral values of the nation. As people become less religious, they are more likely to prioritize individualism over community values. This is reflected in the growing acceptance of practices that were once considered taboo. For years, the United States had been the key case demonstrating that economic modernization need not produce secularization. But recently, the American public has been moving away from religion along with virtually all other high-income countries—in fact, religiosity has been declining more rapidly in the US than in most other countries.

Research has shown that religious affiliation is strongly correlated with moral beliefs and behavior. A 2017 study published in the Journal of Marriage and Family found that religious affiliation was associated with higher levels of marital satisfaction and a lower likelihood of divorce. The study also found that religious individuals were more likely to engage in pro-social behaviors, such as volunteering and charitable giving.

The decline in religious affiliation has also been accompanied by a decline in trust in traditional institutions, such as the government and the media. According in the best interest of the commu-

of Americans say they trust the government to do what is right always or most of the time. Similarly, only 20 percent of Americans say they trust the media to do what is right always or most of the time. The decline in trust in traditional institutions has led to an erosion of the nation's core identity based in communally accepted ethical and moral values. When people do not trust institutions, they are more likely to engage in behaviors that are not study, 40 percent of millennials to a 2018 study, only 18 percent nity. This can include engaging in corrupt practices, lying, and cheating - and any scan of recent media headlines shines a terrifying light on this pattern of behavior showing up again and again.

As people become less religious, they are less likely to participate in religious institutions, such as churches, which have traditionally played a vital role in bringing communities together. Research has shown that religious institutions are essential for building social capital, which refers to the networks of relationships that facilitate cooperalished in the American Sociological Review, religious institutions are the most significant source of social capital in the United States, even surpassing family

Religious institutions provide a sense of belonging and community, which can have a significant impact on mental health and wellbeing. A 2019 Journal of Health and Social Behavior study found that religious participation was associated with lower levels of depression and anxiety, particularly among individuals who were socially isolated, with isolation being the "thing" we were forced to embraced for several

The decline in religious affiliation has also been accompanied by a decline in community participation. According to a 2021 report published by the National Conference on Citizenship, the percentage of Americans who volunteer has decreased from 28 percent in 2005 to 24 percent in 2018. The report also found that the percentage of Americans who attend public meetings has decreased from 13 percent in 2005 to 8 percent in 2018.

The decline in community participation leads back to that sense of social isolation, which is associated with higher levels of depression and anxiety.

Religious institutions also play a vital role in promoting social justice and equality. Many religious organizations are actively involved in promoting social and economic justice, advocating for the rights of marginalized communities, and fighting against discrimination and oppression. Without a doubt, the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s was largely driven by religious lead-tion and trust among individuals. ers, such as Martin Luther King According to a 2000 study pub- Jr., who saw their work as an extension of their faith.

> Faith-based organizations also provide critical services to individuals and communities in need, such as food banks, homeless shelters, and disaster relief services. According to a 2020 report by the National Council of Nonprofits, faith-based organizations make up a significant portion of the nonprofit sector, with religious organizations accounting for over a third of all nonprofit organizations.

> The trifecta of faith, the practice of religion, and education also plays a vital role in shaping the ethics and morals most common in the nation. Faith refers to a person's belief in a higher power, such as a deity or a spiritual force. Faith can provide a moral compass for individuals, helping them to understand what is right and wrong. Religious texts often contain moral teachings and guidance on how to live a virtuous life, which can influence the beliefs and behaviors of believers. Faith can also provide a sense of community, bringing together like-minded individuals who share similar values and beliefs. Religious communities often promote altruism and service to others, which can help to instill a sense of responsibility and empathy in individuals. In addition, religious leaders can provide guidance and support to individuals who are struggling with ethical dilemmas or moral

What Do Race And Ethnicity Mean?

By Mike Schneider

Nyhiem Way is weary of people conflating African American and Black. Shalini Parekh wants a way for South Asian people to identify themselves differently than East Asians with roots in places like China or Japan. And Byron Haskins wants the U.S. to toss racial and ethnic labels alto-

"When you set up categories that are used to place people in boxes, sometimes you miss the truth of them," said Haskins, who describes himself as African

Way, Parekh and Haskins' voices are among more than 4,600 comments pending before the Biden administration as it contemplates updating the nation's racial and ethnic categories for the first time since 1997.

There's a lot to consider. Some Black Americans want their ancestors' enslavement recognized in how they are identified. Some Jewish people believe their identity should be seen as its own ethnic category and not only a religion. The idea of revising categories for ethnic and racial identities, both in the census and in gathering demographic information between head counts, have fueled editorials and thinktank essays as well as thousands of written comments by individuals in what is almost a Rorschach test for how Americans identify themselves.

The White House's Office of Management and Budget is set to decide on new classifications next year and has hosted three virtual town halls on the subject.

Some conservatives question the process itself, saying the overarching premise that Americans need more ethnic categories will only accelerate Balkaniza-

"By creating and deepening sub-national identities, the government further contributes to the decline of one national American identity," wrote Mike Gonzalez, a senior fellow at The Heritage Foundation, in his personal comment posted on the OMB web page seeking public input.

This is certainly a singular moment and opportunity to greatly improve and enhance the accuracy and completeness of the data," Mario Beovides, director of policy and legislative affairs for the NALEO Educational Fund, said during a recent forum.

The proposed changes would create a new category for people of Middle Eastern and North African descent, also known by the acronym MENA, who are now classified as white but say they have been routinely undercount-

The process also would combine the race and ethnic origin questions into a single query, because some advocates say the current method of asking about with those who say previous cat- race and separately about ethnic origin often confuses Hispanic respondents. With the revisions, the government would try to get more detailed answers on race and ethnicity by asking about country of origin.

Another proposal recommends striking from federal government forms the words "Negro" and "Far East," now widely regarded as pejorative. The terms "majority" and "minority" would also be dropped because some officials say they fail to reflect the nation's complex racial and ethnic diversity.

Several Black Americans, like Way, whose ancestors were enslaved, said in public comments to the OMB that they would like to be identified in a category such as American Freedmen, Foundational Black Americans or American Descendants of Slavery to distinguish themselves from Black immigrants, or even white individuals born in Africa, as well as reflecting their ancestors' history in the U.S.

Way, who is president of United Sons & Daughters of Freedmen, which describes itself as dedicated to restoring the broken promises from Reconstruction, also recommended substituting the word "population group" for history, while others say it's a great opportunity to update campus amenities. Shaw University said its ShawU District rezoning request reimagines the possibilities for the HBCU that sits adjacent to the heart of downtown Raleigh. By reimagining, it would lease parts of campus to developers for modern retail, office and residential space. During Tuesday night's meeting, founder of Save Our Shaw, a coalition of 2,000 members created in direct response to Shaw University's rezoning request, Eugene Myric stated, "We don't need to be rezoned. We need better management. There is no plan. They're saying just trust us. Why would we trust you all when you have a track record of distrust? Also, if you want the buildings moved, they will be damaged to be moved." said Myrick

In February, the City of Raleigh's planning commission voted 7 to 1 in favor of the Shaw U District, whereas the Raleigh Historic Development Commission recommended denial 9 to 2.

To further explain, Shaw University is asking the city's permission to rezone about 26 acres of property. Whereas the rezoning would impact 17 properties near the intersection of S. Blount Street and E. South Street. The current zoning allows for buildings with up to 10 floors in these areas. The University is requesting zoning that would allow up to 30 stories on campus between Person and Wilmington streets, and from Martin Luther King Jr. Boulevard to Lenoir Street.

Furthermore, Northeast of campus near E South Street and E Lenoir Street, the University proposes changing zoning to allow up to 12 stories. Southwest of campus between Bledsoe Avenue, Wilmington Street and Martin Luther King Jr. Blvd, the University is requesting up to 20 stories.

That southwest portion has egregiously drawn criticism from some people in the Muslim community. The piece of property is home to the Shaw University's International Studies Center. It also houses the King Khalid Mosque.

To fight for their place of worship, The Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR), shared with us their thoughts at last Tuesday evening's city council meeting.

"Rezoning the land would give the university the ability to sell the building that contains the mosque, which was built with a donation from the Muslim community and open to the public for decades before Shaw University closed it in 2020," CAIR said in a release.

On the contrary, the vice president of real estate during Tuesday night's meeting shared that rezoning approval is vital to update aging infrastructure and to build more student housing.

As the council meeting came to a close, Shaw's rezoning decision was deferred to May 2nd. To give both parties more time to elaborate on their stance. If approved, they'll spend nearly a year on a master plan.

ACLU OF NORTH CAROLINA FILES LAWSUIT AGAINST NC HOUSE BILL 40

The American Civil Liberties Union of North Carolina (ACLU-NC) has filed a federal lawsuit challenging multiple provisions of North Carolina's "Anti-Riot Act", as recently amended by House Bill 40.1 (HB 40). HB 40 significantly increases criminal penalties for protesting and makes protestors liable for substantial civil damages to individuals harmed by a protest, even where a protestor only verbally encouraged activities defined as "rioting" and did not take any individual actions to cause injury or damage. The suit contends that multiple provisions of the law, including provisions that could apply to protestors whose own conduct is entirely peaceful, are overbroad and vague and will function to dissuade people from engaging in law-

Regarding the lawsuit, Sam Davis, Attorney from the ACLU of NC Legal Foundation released the following statement:

'HB40 represents a culmination of the legislature's repeated efforts to crack down in response to the Black Lives Matter protests of 2020. It is a flagrant attempt to vilify and criminalize a social justice movement. This bill forces North Carolinians to risk the immediate and long-term loss of their freedom when exercising their right to protest. This suit is an effort to protect the right to protest and advances our continued support and defense of the Black Lives Matter movement and activists.

The ACLU of NC suit notes that multiple advocates noted constitutional problems with HB 40 before its passage. Yet, the General Assembly persisted in enacting a law that legislators knew would violate North Carolinians' First Amendment rights,

'Protest is at the heart of a functioning democracy," said Chantal Stevens, executive director of the ACLU of North Carolina. "By implementing harsher penalties for so- called rioting, the bill discourages protest and pushes the false narrative that protesters are violent and dangerous.'

The ACLU-NC plans to follow the filing of this suit by moving the court to halt the enforcement of these plainly unconstitutional portions of HB 40.

HORNETS WON'T GO 'BIG-GAME HUNTING' EVEN IF JORDAN SELLS

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — The Charlotte Hornets aren't expected to be big spenders in free agency this summer even if Michael Jordan

The Hornets are a projected $39 million under the NBA salary cap for next season — which ranks in the top 10 in the league in terms of available spending money — but the team plans to focus on re-signing their own players and adding others through the draft and "savvy trades," according to general manager Mitch Kupchak.

"Although we have a lot of financial flexibility, we don't typically go big-game hunting with our free agent money," Kupchak said Tuesday. He then added, "We're going to use that to sign back players."

The Hornets (27-55) finished with the fourth-worst record in the league, so they're guaranteed to pick somewhere between 1 and 8 depending on the outcome of the May 16 draft lottery. Charlotte has five draft picks in all, including two in the first round, although Kupchak indicated it's unlikely the team will use them all.

The Hornets haven't won a playoff series in more than two decades, and Jordan has been criticized at times by fans for not spending enough money to get big-name free agents.

Last month, Jordan's family office released a statement saying the six-time NBA champion is considering selling another portion of the team to Hornets minority owner Gabe Plotkin. While it's unclear if Jordan will give up his majority stake in the team, Kupchak indicated it is largely irrelevant in terms of the Hornets building process.

"Typically, the basketball operations (such as) players, contracts, who you draft and all that stuff doesn't really get affected by that," Kupchak said of a potential change in ownership.

Kupchak's first priority will be re-signing restricted free agent P.J. Washington, who appears to have nailed down the starting 4 spot after averaging 15.7 points per game.

Whether or not the team makes a move to bring back restricted free agent Miles Bridges remains to be seen.

Bridges was charged with three counts of domestic violence last summer, and although the case has since been settled the league is still looking into the matter and he could face disciplinary action.

informed decisions. In addition, education can help to promote diversity and tolerance, fostering a more inclusive and compassionate society. However, the education system in the United States has been criticized for its failure to adequately address issues related to ethics and morals. Many schools focus primarily on academic achievement, with little attention paid to character development and social-emotional learning.

There is a growing movement to incorporate ethics and morals into the education system, with some schools adopting curriculums that explicitly address these issues. For example, the Character Education Partnership is a nonprofit organization that provides resources and training for schools to promote character education.

It may seem insignificant on the surface, but faith and religion give a collective North Star to communities and can bring together opponents and foster collaboration. In January, representatives of the Muslim, Catholic and Jewish faiths came together at the Vatican to sign a document

Among the many topics given attention were: AI replacing human labor; determining who is responsible for AI-generated mistakes and misinformation; the protection of privacy and limits of surveillance; the need for safety, transparency and fairness; and biases used in algorithms. No "grand solution" exists, but there is "a cocktail of answers to what is the right thing to do," Dario Gil, IBM's senior vice president and director of research, said at a Vaticanhosted event Jan. 10.

"We need all the help we can get" to make sure AI is "aligned with fundamental human values without leaving anyone behind," Gil said. That is one of the reasons why almost three years ago IBM and Microsoft became the first signatories of the Rome Call for AI Ethics. The initiative was led by the Pontifical Academy for Life, which invited two of the world's leading developers of artificial intelligence software to sign an appeal for an ethical framework and guidelines for the field of AI.

complex ethical dilemmas. What responsibilities do humans have in the face of climate change? How can we address health care disparities that continue to devastate Black and brown communities? How do we convince people to set aside their personal preferences and do the right thing? And above all, how do we make our world more fair? The coronavirus pandemic offered proof that it's not enough to appeal to Americans' feelings of patriotism or even to other secular ideas about working for the greater good of the greatest number of people for wide acceptance of the good to be enacted. Tackling COVID-19 required every American to make personal sacrifices to protect society as a whole. But there was still loud resistance from individuals who thought that the ask was too great — who did not want to be part of that mutual project or were opposed to submitting to the state's regulations.

The language people use to think through public health and justice issues has become deeply fractured and politicized. Religion, which offers a rich and moral fortitude?

complex set of metaphors capable of uniting a broad swath of people, becomes increasingly important. Particularly in a country where most people identify as belonging to a religion, faithbased appeals for fairness can have resonance. While there has been a decline in religious affiliation in recent years, faith and religion continue to play a vital role in fostering community behavior and promoting social justice and equality. Religious institutions are still a significant source of social capital and provide a sense of belonging and community for many individuals. As the United States continues to navigate the challenges of the 21st century, it is essential to recognize the importance of faith and religion in fostering behaviors centered in the good of the community, and promoting social justice and equality.

The MENA community appears to be having a related problem, based on several comments to OMB. Without its own category, the group's political power is diluted. Black TN Lawmaker Was Expelled, Now Reinstated

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) -One of the two Black Democrats who were expelled last week from the GOP-led Tennessee House was reinstated Monday after Nashville's governing council voted to send him straight back to the Legislature.

The unanimous vote by the Nashville Metropolitan Council took only a few minutes to restore Rep. Justin Jones to office just four days after Republicans stripped him of his seat.

Moments later, Jones marched to the Capitol several blocks away. He took the oath of office on the steps and entered the building while supporters sang "This Little Light of Mine." A loud round of applause erupted as Jones walked into the chamber with Democratic Rep. Gloria Johnson, who was also targeted for expulsion, but spared by one vote. "To the people of Tennessee,

I stand with you," Jones said in his first statement on the House floor. "We will continue to be your voice here. And no expulsion, no attempt to silence us will stop us, but it will only galvanize and strengthen our movement. And we will continue to show up in the people's house.

Small Business Owners Are Feeling The Credit Crunch Now

NEW YORK (AP) — When Nat West, owner of cider-making company Reverend Nat's Hard Cider, decided to supplement his wholesale business by opening a taproom in a bustling neighborhood in Portland, Oregon, he thought getting financing would be

After all, he was only seeking $50,000, has been in business for 11 years, and takes in more than $1 million in annual revenue.

In February and March, West reached out to three lenders he had previously gotten financing from, including one where he has an existing line of credit. To his surprise, he was rejected.

"I feel like it's really weird, it's such a small amount of money for a business that has so much ongoing, sustained revenue and has been in the same community for a long time," he said.

West isn't alone. Borrowing for small businesses was already constrained due to rising interest rates. Following the recent collapse of Silicon Valley Bank and Signature Bank, some lenders - particularly the small and midsize banks that serve small businesses -- may be forced to tighten credit further, since they're capital. And banks are being more cautious in general due to uncertainty about the economy.

"It's hard to read how severe this is going to be, but it's certainly going to be significant and when you look at how things play out, small businesses are hit the hardest," said Ray Keating, chief economist for the Small Business & Entrepreneurship Council.

According to the latest Biz-2Credit Small Business Lending Index released in February, the approval rates of small business loan requests at big banks have fallen for nine consecutive months. The larger banks approved just 14.2% of applications in February, down from 28.3% seeing an outflow of deposits, in February 2020. Small banks which means they need to retain granted about 20% of loan applications this February, but they were approving about half of all requests back in early 2020, before the pandemic hit.

An overall tightening of credit will help slow down the economy and ease inflation, which is what the Federal Reserve hopes to achieve by hiking interest rates, said Rohit Arora, CEO and cofounder of Biz2Credit. But that means that small businesses -- a big job creator and source of innovation for the economy -- will be left in the lurch

"It will be the small companies that suffer the most if this continues," he said.

Basic Fun, a Boca Raton, Florida-based maker of such toys as Care Bears and Lincoln Logs, had to temporarily scuttle plans for an acquisition due to the crunch. CEO Jay Foreman said he was ready to with 12 of the prospective 23 lenders lined up in late February and early March. But that number shrank to two after Silicon Valley Bank failed and triggered the recent banking turmoil.

"It's just not the right timing now as lenders appear unclear about the broader credit markets and seem to be clutching the purse strings tightly at this point," Foreman said. "We just have to ride this out until conditions are right to arrange the proper financing for our acquisition.'

Companies that have existing lines of credit are seeing interest rates increase. James Carron, who operates Flatirons Pharmaceuticals, in Longmont, Colorado, has seen rates increase for his line of credit that's about $150,000. Before the pandemic, the rate was 6.99%, but that went up to 10%. Now it's 13% and rapidly approaching 14%. Other potential lenders he contacted had but when she recently turned dreams on hold." even higher rates.

So, Carron said he's put off the go with non-binding agreements he said, because smaller businesses have fewer levers they can pull to get financing.

TOKYO (AP) — Japan's Defense Ministry announced Tuesday it has signed contracts worth nearly 380 billion yen ($2.8 billion) with the country's top defense contractor, Mitsubishi Heavy Industries, to develop and mass produce long-range missiles for deployment as early as 2026 amid growing fears of China's increasing military strength.

The ministry said the contracts include enhanced versions of Mitsubishi's Type 12 missiles for surface, sea and air launches, and a hypersonic ballistic missile for the defense of remote islands. Mass production of Type 12 land-to-ship guided missiles and hypersonic gliding missiles, which have already been developed, will begin this year, the ministry said. Officials refused to provide the number of missiles that Japan plans to deploy but indicated that production is expected to gradually increase over the next five years.

Due to limited land space at home, Japan plans to hold pre-deployment missile tests at military bases in the United States, ministry officials said.

Another contract is for development of submarine-launched longrange anti-ship guided missiles, beginning this year and planned through 2027. Timing for their deployment is still undecided.

The development plan is based on a new National Security Strategy that Japan announced in December as it seeks to significantly increase its military power to deter potential threats from China, North Korea and Russia.

A Gamified App Teaching Credit Education Nabs 1st Place

bama State University won the inaugural #IYKYK Hackathon, which capped off the six-month Center for Financial Advancement Credit Academy, sponsored by Experian and HomeFree-USA. The "Credit Stingers" winning idea was a gamified app that teaches credit education and fiscal responsibility. The team of four won a $40,000 scholarship.

"We talked about teaching people from ages 10 to 99. That's how much of an impact credit has. Through our app, we hope to tell more people about credit," said Mandelkosi Sibanda of Alabama State University.

A team of students from Ala- mates Thomas Mulaisho, Takudzwa Modza and Janai Thompson earned a $40,000 scholarship for their concept, "Credit Rush." The award-winning idea is a game where, in order to overcome obstacles, students watch a video or take a quiz about credit in order to advance to higher levels. Other features include the "Hive," a library of credit education materials, chat, daily calendar functions and more.

The #IYKYK Hackathon challenged students to create a credit education program for their peers, including those who are not part of the credit ecosystem. The competition was the culmination of a six month program as part of the Nicknamed the "ASU Credit Center for Financial Advance-Stingers," Sibanda and his team- ment® (CFA) Credit Academy sponsored by Experian and Home-Free-USA that brought together more than 250 students from 14 Historically Black Colleges and Universities (HBCUs) in live sessions with Experian credit education experts and self-paced content. Finalists from ASU, Fisk University, Morgan State University and Shaw University represented six countries and eight different languages. The teams presented their ideas live at Experian's North America headquarters.

"Every team exceeded our expectations. We're inspired by these student leaders and their commitment to driving positive change in their communities. In sharing their personal stories and experiences, they're helping us create solutions that are culturally and generationally relevant so we can meet them where they are in their financial and credit journeys," said Raudy Perez, Experian North America's senior director for diversity, equity and inclusion partnerships. 'This is the most transformative experience that many of these students will have in their lives," said Gwen Garnett, HomeFree-USA Center for Financial Advancement® Executive Director. "We thank Experian for its commitment to the CFA and its scholars by helping us provide the training and tools to allow young adults and credit invisibles to understand and successfully navigate the credit ecosystem.

"You gotta live with stuff," Bernard said as the couple moved from room to room during a subsequent home visit.

He pointed out Laura Wheeler Waring's 1941 oil painting "Woman With the Orange Scarf" hanging in the dining room across from a 1924 still-life by abstract art pioneer Alma Thomas, as though the two groundbreaking artists are in conversation (the former would famously paint a portrait of the latter in 1947). And on the second-floor landing, there's a 1995 watercolor by Pennsylvania artist Dane Tilghman, as well as three individual family portraits painted by L.A. artist Mikel Alatza in the aughts.

"I want all the old stuff and she wants all the new," Bernard joked of the pair's collecting predilections. "So, I said, 'Baby, you take that lane, I'll get this lane."

Bernard's most beloved "old stuff" is kept in a small study off the foyer. Here, he's considerably more cautious. "I'm gonna put

Historian Charles L. Blockson's 1990 tome "Catalogue of the C.L.B. Afro-American Collection" has pride of place on a wooden bookcase. "This is my bible," Bernard said of the historical text that has inspired many of his artifact searches. "[Blockson's] my hero because he did it before it was fashionable."

The Kinseys' African American collection joins a considerable amount of Indigenous masks, statues and woven baskets that they've gathered on trips to national parks across

China and across sub-Saharan Africa. After watching Alex Haley's television miniseries "Roots," in 1977, and the birth of their son, they began to shift their focus to include cultural markers of the Black American experience. Shirley recalled having a wakeup call during that momentous viewing: "We were just like, 'OK, we know about all of these other cultures. We need to learn more about our own."

The couple credits their advisor, artist and art historian Edward Pratt, with helping them identify significant artifacts and responsible for informing their "understanding of the connection between art, history and culture.'

"It's unbelievably difficult to acquire this stuff because it ain't about money," Bernard said, adding "it's about your knowledge and your persistence." While he recounted tales of asking a painter to sell them a creation before it was even completed, or calling fellow collectors incessantly for months or decades in pursuit of a coveted first-edition book, Shirley filled in dates, cities or names that he couldn't remember.

They've been on this collecting journey together since they got

Unconscious Biases Continue To Hold Back Women In Medicine

By Jennifer R. Grandis

University of California

If you work at a company, university or large organization, you've probably sat through a required training session meant to fight gender and racial discrimination in the workplace. Employers increasingly invest in efforts to promote diversity, equity and inclusion – commonly referred to as DEI policies. Yet research shows these efforts often fail to address the implicit biases that often lead to discrimination.

I am a professor and a physiuniversity settings for over 30 years. I also study and speak about discrimination in medicine and science. Like most of my female colleagues, I have personally seen and experienced gender discrimination on many occasions throughout my career.

However, two things seem to have changed in recent years. First, modern training programs are starting to reflect decades of research on effective interventions. Second, I am noticing a gradual shift with people now more interested in actively addressing discrimination and harassment than ever before. Taken together, these changes give me hope that the medical profession is finally making progress on efforts to fight discrimination.

EXISTING POLICIES HAVEN'T WORKED

Many institutional policies outline anti-racist and anti-sexist goals, but research shows results have been slow in coming.

In a study I conducted to understand what continues to hold women back in their careers, I interviewed more than 100 men and women in academic medicine, including many in high-powered positions. In my study, dozens of interviewees told me stories of DEI policies that, even with the right intentions, failed to produce good results.

For example, frequently search analysis.

committees are encouraged to broaden and diversify the pool of candidates for a position. In my study, I found that hiring committees often associate attempts to hire or promote a woman or member of an underrepresented group as "meeting a quota" or "affirmative action," which the hiring committee sees as an imposition on their ability to choose the best candidates

A male faculty member I interviewed claimed that a new colleague was hired "because she's a woman," even though she was as qualified for the position as other cian who has been working in male candidates. Such reactions are part of why this approach, though commonly employed, has not fixed the problem of women getting fewer promotions than

It is also clear that blatant sexism is still present. For a study I published in 2021, I was told stories of a male department chair putting a dog leash on the desk of a female co-worker, and a female candidate for a leadership position being criticized by the chair of the search committee for not being "warm and fuzzy"

TRAININGS FAIL TO ADDRESS IMPLICIT BIAS

Implicit bias is any unconscious negative attitude a person holds against a specific social group. These unconscious biases can affect judgment, decision making and behavior. Implicit bias is often one of the underlying issues that leads to discriminatory practices or harassment that DEI policies are meant to address.

Employee trainings are a staple of organizations' efforts to meet diversity, equity and inclusion goals. Trainings can take various forms and cover a variety of topics, including implicit bias. These trainings, frequently done online, often "talk at" employees by simply offering information and directives rather than actively engaging them in discussion and Trainings that fail to engage participants aren't very effective in lessening imlicit bias. In fact, research has shown that some trainings suggest unconscious bias is an unchangeable fact of life and imply it can therefore be ignored.

EFFECTIVE WAYS TO MITIGATE UNCONSCIOUS BIAS

Describing how bias works and how it influences individuals is an important step in addressing discrimination.

Researchers have been studying how unconscious bias works and how to mitigate it since the 1980s. These studies show that unconscious bias is a habit that can be broken over time with a clear, consistent and respectful series of evaluations, feedback and follow-ups. During this pro-aware of bias in others, more likely to judge such bias as problematic and more able to mitigate bias in their own behavior. This type of intervention has been shown to produce measurable increases in the number of female faculty in science and medicine.

The question is whether the mandatory trainings and public messaging that are the staples of many DEI policies today can produce similar results to these intensive interventions.

Creating situations or a culture where people can and do share their experiences with harassment and discrimination - without risk of retaliation - can lead to increased awareness of bias in others and clear communication of the negative aspects of this

One interviewee in my study talked about an exercise in which the women wrote down their experiences of discrimination and harassment and then the men read the women's stories out loud. This woman felt that the men, by cess, employees become more reciting the experiences of their female colleagues, finally began to understand how practices that seemed to be inclusive and fair were actively harming others.

A CHANGING SOCIAL ENVIRONMENT

Sharing personal experiences of harassment or discrimination with people who have biases is an understandably scary or intimidating thing to do - especially given the history of retaliation or shaming. But my recent experiences seem to suggest that the culture in medicine is shifting from one of avoidance to one of engagement.

I recently gave a talk on gender discrimination at a major cancer conference that brought together researchers from all across the U.S. I shared the results of my study as well as my personal experiences with the audience. At the end of my presentation, the crowd of men and women stood and applauded - a response I have rarely, if ever, seen in my 30 vears of attending medical con-

Judge: Insurance Co. Don't Have To Cover Care Services

By Stacy M. Brown

NNPA

In a big blow to health insurance in the U.S., a federal judge has ruled that insurers no longer have to pay for preventive care services like cancer and heart disease screenings.

The ruling comes as a result of a lawsuit brought by a group of insurers who argued that the Affordable Care Act (ACA) exceeded its authority by requiring them to cover certain preventative care services without being able to charge co-payments or deductibles.

The Affordable Care Act, or Obamacare, was signed into law in 2010 to make it easier for millions of Americans to get health insurance.

One of the law's key provisions was the requirement that insurance companies cover certain preventative care services without cost-sharing, including immunizations, blood pressure screenings, and mammograms.

However, the recent ruling by U.S. District Judge Reed O'Connor of the Northern District of Texas has effectively invalidated this provision of the ACA.

In his ruling, Judge O'Connor wrote that the ACA's requirement for insurers to cover preventative care services "exceeds the powers of Congress under the Commerce Clause" of the U.S. Constitution.

The ruling is likely to significantly affect health insurance in the U.S., especially for people who already have health problems like cancer or heart disease.

If insurance companies weren't required to cover preventive care services, patients might be less likely to get the screenings and tests that could catch these health problems early.

Experts said this could lead to serious health problems and higher healthcare costs.

"The President is glad to see the Department of Justice is appealing the judge's decision, which blocks a key provision of the Affordable Care Act that has ensured free access to preventive health care for 150 million Americans," White House Press Secretary Karine Jean-

"This case is yet another attack on the Affordable Care Act – which has been the law of the land for 13 years and survived three challenges before the Supreme Court."

Jean-Pierre continued: "Preventive care saves lives, saves families money, and protects and improves our health. Because of the ACA, millions of Americans have access to free cancer and heart disease screenings. This decision threatens to jeopardize critical care.

"The Administration will continue to fight to improve health care and make it more affordable for hard-working families, even in the face of attacks from special interests.'

Critics of the ruling include healthcare advocacy groups and politicians. They say it will make it more complicated and expensive for millions of Americans to get health insurance. In a statement, Dr. Patrice Harris, president of the American Medical Association, called the ruling "a clear step backward for our health system."

"Preventative care is a cornerstone of good health," Dr. Harris said. "It's critical that patients have access to these services without costsharing to stay healthy and catch health problems early before they become more serious and more costly to treat.'

The ruling is also likely to face legal challenges in the coming months. Several states and healthcare advocacy groups have already said they will appeal the decision. They say that the Affordable Care Act's (ACA) requirement that insurers cover preventive care services is a crucial part of the law's goal to make more people eligible for health insurance.

In the meantime, patients and healthcare providers alike are left to grapple with the uncertain future of healthcare coverage in the U.S. Without the assurance of coverage for preventative care services, and patients may be forced to choose between paying out-of-pocket for these services or foregoing them altogether, potentially putting their health and well-being at risk. "Once again, an extreme activist judge is taking a monumental swing at the Affordable Care Act, which has saved millions of lives and made Americans healthier for the last 13 years," Congressional Black Caucus Chair Steven Horsford (D-Nevada) stated. "The preventative care provisions in the law have ensured that, without concern for cost, Americans have been able to get screened for things like diabetes, breast cancer and heart disease.' "It also puts the brakes on critical preventative treatments like immunizations and PrEP for HIV."

Career Fair Inspires Elementary School Student In Durham

ris Elementary in Durham had the opportunity to partake in a career fair thanks to the women of Alpha Theta Chapter of Eta Phi Beta and alumni of North Carolina Central University. Throughout the career fair, students were able to visit various vendor tables to learn about dance, law school, culinary arts, broadcast journalism, and cosmetology.

During the event, Edna Jones spoke to young ladies about the difference between a civil and criminal lawyer. A local chef shared the importance of eating healthy and the proper equipment to use when cooking. In addition, founders of The NCdugout dance company, Ro and Nicki taught young ladies a quick workout dance routine and majorette dance styles including jazz, hiphop, ballet, burlesque, cabaret, staff shared the history of the radio station.

Since its debut in August 1995, WNCU, 90.7 FM still continues to provide a culturally diverse programming lineup. Lastly, Dedra Hines spoke with students on having a career in cosmetology. She emphasized that whether they chose to be a barber, makeup artist, or beautician, they are helping people look and feel their best.

Ms. Cassandra Madden, member of Eta Phi Beta shared with us her sentiments on the fair.

"I believe that what we are doing today will carry these 5th graders throughout their lives. This is such a good age for them to really hone in on whatever path they want to take in life. We are also grateful to have all these vendors here to talk to them about different career choices.'

Lawyer Accused Of Scamming Homeowners Skips Court Date

By Ted Glanzer

A North Carolina attorney facing felony charges for her alleged role in scamming poor homeowners failed to appear at a hearing related to her criminal case scheduled last week.

Ilesanmi "Ile" Adaramola is accused of finding properties facing foreclosure and forcing them into auction by falsifying documents, among other things, according to the Asheville Citizen-Times. Adaramola and notary Lisa Roberts-Allen, allegedly used a Jim Crow-era law that permitted one owner of a jointly held said that was not true. property to force a sale, with bidders purchasing the property at significantly less than market was looking forward to being value. The buyer would then sell the property at a profit.

Adaramola was charged with six counts of notary fraud, while Roberts-Allen was charged with nine counts of notary fraud and 32 counts of felony forgery. One of Roberts-Allen's alleged victims is her own uncle, the outlet reported.

James Mills, Adaramola's former lawyer, told the court he did not represent Adaramola, nor did he know where she was. Mills said in court that Adaramola told him that another lawyer

Steve Lindsay — was representing her, though Lindsay later

Lindsay, when reached by the Asheville Citizen-Times, said he hired by Adaramola as her lawyer, but it had not yet been finalized.

Failing to appear in court can be a crime, but the judge did not order Adaramola's arrest. Her hearing was instead rescheduled, the Citizen-Times reported.

Attorneys can sometimes find themselves in hot water concerning real estate matters.

Last January, disbarred attorney Sanford Solny was indicted by the Brookly district attorney for the third time in six years for allegedly defrauding homeowners to the tune of $2.3 million. Solny was charged with possession of stolen property, grand larceny and scheme to de-

SERMON of the WEEK

I want to speak about something that I believe was mentioned in many Sermons this past Easter Sunday, and that's the tomb. Let's look at a tomb cut into a rock in the earth and used as an enclosure for a

You're probably wondering whose tomb? Well, I want to speak about the tomb of a close friend of Jesus named Lazarus.

Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live: John 11:25 KJV.

"Taking the Gloom Out of the Tomb"

John Chapter 11:3 NLT informs us that a man named Lazarus was sick. His two sisters sent a message to Jesus telling him, "Lord, your dear friend is very sick.'

But when Jesus received the news, he stayed where he was for two more days. He said, "Lazarus' sickness will not end in death. No, it happened for the glory of God so that the Son of God will receive glory from Finally, he said to his disciples, "Let's go back to Judea." When Jesus arrived, he was told that Lazarus had already been in his grave for four days.

Martha said to Jesus, "Lord, if only you had been here, my brother would not have died. But even now I know that God will give you whatever you ask." Although her brother's state was full of doom and gloom, Martha showed her faith in Jesus and He told her, "Your brother will rise again."

Often, humans will panic, get upset, blow off steam, and play the blame game during a crisis, but we should notice how Jesus kept his cool here in John Chap-

we lose our cool, Jesus will the sisters' bubble because always have our worst nightmares under and in control at all times!

Whenever you are frustrated because God has not chosen to respond to you according to your timetable, remember that if you prayed from your heart, He heard your prayer, He got the news, and He's aware of your situation! He may not come when we want Him, but He's always on time.

The sisters didn't know it then, but after Jesus showed up, He knew that their circumstances would change, even if it would take a miracle.

11:25 NLT: Jesus said unto her, "I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live:" Anyone who believes in Him will live, even after dying, because He has the POWER to take the gloom out of every tomb if He so desires.

The good thing about celebrating Easter is that although a person may die from sickness or other sad reasons, Jesus lets us know that His dead friends shall live again. [Oh, what a friend we have in Jesus...].

When Mary came to Jesus, she said the same thing that her sister said. I want you to know that if Jesus is on the scene, it doesn't matter what sisters, brothers, family, friends, or the followers of Jesus say. There will always be critics, but that didn't stop Jesus from taking care of God's business and doing what God had willed Him to

Yes, they had voiced their opinions and had given their First Take on the situation, but despite this, J-E-S-U-S SHOWED UP WITH POWER and AUTHORITY and LOVE FOR HIS FRIENDS. He loved We must remember even when us too. He didn't try to burst you!

they blamed and misunderstood him. He has no respecter of person. He loves all of us, and we should not hold grudges and love one another as He has loved us.

Although Lazarus had been dead for four days, it only took Jesus less than four seconds to say, "Lazarus come forth!" He called him by name so everybody in the cemetery wouldn't get up. However, if anybody else there was named Lazarus, they would have gotten up too!

Although his heart had stopped, his pulse had ceased, and his sister said he smelled like a dead man; he walked out of the darkness of the gloomy tomb into the marvelous light, and Jesus said to take off his grave clothes.

Lazarus made it out, and you can make it out wherever you

If God wants to: When the doctor says no, Jesus can say yes. When the Physician said no way, Jesus, The Great Physician, says MY Way! When the feeding tubes are unplugged, that's when Jesus plugs in! And when the breathing machine is turned off, that's when He's turned on!

God stepped in, and Lazarus stepped out! We can do just like Lazarus; we can take off our grave clothes and then say I made it our alright!

If you're locked up in jail or prison, you can make it out! If you're in a scary courtroom, operating room, ICU, or even the enemy tried to drive you crazy, you can make it out alright! Be it Depression, Recessions, or Oppression, God can deliver us from whatever life throws at us!

MLK's Vision Of Social Justice Included Religious Pluralism

By Roy Whitaker

San Diego State Univ

The life and legacy of the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. have been the subject of ongoing debate ever since his assassination on April 4, 1968.

Today, those invoking King's memory range from Black Lives Matters organizers and President Joe Biden to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy. Educators trying to teach Black history call on his principles, even as their opponents claim that lessons about systemic racism go against King's desire not to judge people "by the color of their skin." In an age of polarization, it is worth remembering that one of the pillars of King's philosophy was pluralism: the idea of multiple communities engaging one another, acknowledging their differences and shared bonds, and striving to create what King called a "Beloved Community."

As an African American philosopher who studies comparative religion, I am especially interested in what role religious pluralism played in King's fight for civil rights in the United States of America and human liberation around the world.

King's worldview was deeply nurtured by his experiences in the Black Church, where the Bible's stories of freedom and oppression are central. The Book of Exodus, for example, tells the story of Hebrew slaves seeking deliverance, and the message has been a frequent theme in Black hymns and preaching for centuries. In the Book of Amos, the prophet cries out, "Let justice roll down like waters" - which is a line King famously quoted in his "I Have a Dream" speech.

Building off the work of other pioneering Black Christians, King embraced interfaith leadership. His mentor Howard Thurman, who founded the Church for the Fellowship of All Peoples, traveled to India to meet with activist Mahatma Gandhi, who was

Gandhi's approach to nonviolent protest was also influential for Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, whose sermon on the subject after a trip to India in 1949 profoundly shaped King's religious philosophy. The religious diversity of

King's coalitions was evident in events like the 1965 March on Selma, where some participants were severely beaten by police on "Bloody Sunday."

Marchers came from a chorus of faiths that included priests and nuns, Episcopal seminarian, highprofile Unitarian Universalists like James Reeb, who was murdered days later, as well as Jewish leaders like Rabbi Abraham tributaries that keep it flowing."

Joshua Heschel.

Complementing his Black Church upbringing, King was inspired by wisdom across continents and cultures, from the Greek classics and Gandhi to Buddhist leaders like Thich Nhat Hanh. Despite their differing dogmas, he hoped leaders from across the religious spectrum and those of no particular faith would join efforts to promote economic and racial justice and stand against imperialism.

When King used the word "pluralism," he assumed that its ideal of belonging had both religious and racial connotations. For example, King praised the Supreme Court's decision in Engel v. Vitale, which concluded that public schools could not sponsor prayers, and which segregationist Alabama Governor George Wallace opposed. "In a pluralistic society such as ours, who is to determine what prayer shall be spoken, and by whom?" King said in a 1965 interview.

More than a decade earlier, during his time at seminary, King had written a paper exhibiting a keen awareness of Christianity's connections with other faiths: "To discuss Christianity without mentioning other religions would be like discussing the greatness of the Atlantic Ocean without the slightest mention of the many

SUPPER READ: MARK 14:26

Things didn't begin to jump off, so to speak, until after the Passover Supper with the disciples. What our Lord had done, in a sense, was to prepare what we can call a heavenly meal for His disciples. This meal, in a Day? Or did you make any spiritual sense, was more than just a Passover Meal to Jesus (Luke 22:14-16). Remember that Jesus, at some unknown time earlier had made the real preparations for the pending Passover Meal. Jesus used His spiritual, wonder working powers to put in place the needed physical logistics for the Passover supper, namely the dining room and the water which Jesus also paid for the consequences would later use as a spiritual object lesson when He washed the disciple's feet.

It is for sure Jesus did not sin unless there is shedding of serve a hotdog and French blood (Hebrews 9:21-22). The fries-type of meal to His disciples. Any meal consisting of lamb chops and fixings cannot be considered a meal from the hood. Judas might have expected such. scripture where the pascal lamb was prepared, outside or disciples obviously did a good oned His disciples to come.

There was only one thing which was overlooked by the disciples in making the preparations. Did you forget something as you were preparing to celebrate the Easter Holy preparations at all? Was there something more important than celebrating our Lord's Crucifixion, as to why you didn't show up to praise and thank God for the two gifts He gave us the cleansing of our sins and the full payment for our sins death. We often forget that Jesus not only paid for our sins by shedding His blood, but He of our sins by dying. Jesus shed His blood and He died for us. There is no remission of soul that sins shall die (Ezekiel

It was during the great fellowship meal celebrating the Passover of the pascal lamb, wherein, Jesus began to hear some covered-up talk from His disciples which was not directed at Him. Earlier the disciples were very concerned about Jesus going away and leaving them. Earlier before supper, Judas had slipped away and went to find the Priest to make a deal with them about finding Jesus after the Passover. The disciple's talk now is all about who is going to be Jesus' right -hand man when He come into his kingdom here on earth (Luke 22:24). Jesus knew then the devage and empower His disciples il was tugging at His disciple's egos for they were thinking only of themselves. They had "I will drink no more wine with forgotten all about what was about to happen to Jesus.

disciples an object lesson in humility by washing all their feet Himself. Jesus poured water into the basin Himself and began to wash their feet. If I your Lord and Master wash your feet, you ought to wash one another's feet. Judas couldn't handle the love Jesus reflected toward him, especially after Jesus had given him the "sop" from the supper meal. The eastern custom of giving a "sop" to a dinner guest signifies the guest as being a wellfavored and a welcomed guest. Judas' guilt would not allow him to stay at supper and was coached by the devil to go out now and betray Jesus. Judas left the supper with the intent to betray Jesus. It was then Jesus declared that Him and His Father would be glorified now that Judas, the evil one, was away from the company of Jesus, and His tried, and true disciples. When you think about it, Jesus never called Judas to discipleship as He did the other disciples. Yet Jesus made no difference with him. Judas was fully accepted in the group, even though Jesus knew Judas was a thief.

With Judas out of the way for the time being, Jesus pours out another cup of wine for the disciples to drink (Mark 14:23-25). Jesus did not break any bread on this occasion. This second cup of wine symbolized the blood Covenant that God made ers to carry the gospel. After Mount of Olives.

When I was a volunteer coach at Garinger High School in the Charlotte-Mecklenburg School District, there was great interest in the school's wrestling program. We did not have a dedicated wrestling room like other schools within CMS. We were allocated space in the extremely dated weight room. To be blunt, it was dangerous. An extra level of caution was needed to make sure kids did not accidentally collide into 45 pound bars and standing squat racks.

Every practice we had to take extra time to move the equipment out of the way and mind you the room was small to begin with. The mission was simple. Adapt, and overcome. It was better than not having any space at all.

During this period, CMS police zoned the area of Garinger high as a hostile territory that was plagued with MS-13 gang activity. At least twice during practice an alarm went off and the school was shut down due to gang related violence

It became ever clear that the wrestling program, as well as any winter sports were necessary because it gave those children the opportunity to have an excuse not to get involved in what was waiting from them when the bell rang, ending their final period of class.

The athletic director at the time did not feel the same way. The mindset wreaked of it did not matter if one sport was active or all the winter sports were active, her paycheck remained the same. Much of the money allocated to the school was put into the school's basketball program. All one had to do was look at the tarmac they tried to pass off as a football field. No one is sliding into any base with dirt harder than asphalt and the outfield was a mess. The tennis courts were lined with cracks, and at least the lines around the track for track and field were semi visible.

The problem was no one cared about the other sports, except for the kids who wished to participate in them. All of the winter sports were canceled except basketball. Pick any excuse that could come to mind and that would be the reason why the other winter season sports were canceled. For exmaple, there are not have enough bus drivers. Schools like Phillip O'Berry Acadamey had coaches with the necessary license to drive school buses. No one bothered to ask if any teachers, gym teachers, or coaches would be willing to go through the process of driving the activity buses. To be polite, perhaps the request did get put out, but no one showed up for the kids. Just like that, these kids were told in a roundabout way, if you can not dribble, post up, and shoot, we're not interested and shoved them right through the gateway of gang recruitment.

That was 13 years ago and a lot has changed in Charlotte and how youth a engage the world around them. The sad reality about gangs is they often target young impressionable minds. Often giving them a very lopsided perspective of life, conflict and resolutions. Back this up with the chorus of amen corner to reverberate the sentiment, and just like that you have hacked another young mind to thier cause.

No child or person in general wants to feel threatened. Going to school should be purely about academia, making bonds and friendships that will ultimately shape the kind of adult they will grow into. Instead, schools have become a peachtree for recruitment of whether or not to be gay. Whether or not to be democrat or republican. And too much of their perception of the world is provided by group think snippets that perverted distortion of reality.

There is a reason why there is a minimum age to purchase alcohol and tobacco. To enter casinos. Even the legality of when it is considered appropriate for coitus. This is because as adults we are supposed to protect the kids' innocence and allow them to develop with certain structures and fundamentals. Ask any grown homosexual. They will tell you they did not need a class to figure out that they were gay nor did they require a step by step instruction on how to function in the queer world.

What is disturbing is that a gang far more powerful than MS-13 is shaping the minds of the next generation. Wolves parading as sheep in plain sight. Kids are now being taught that being African American is synonymous to being some tier of the LGBTQ+.heirarchy. Not white people. Not Indian people. Not Chinese. Specifically black people. When the discussions of CRT comes up, they do not dive into the act of buck breaking and the visceral towards the African American male. Instead it is a dive into the alternative lifestyles of blacks, as cross dressers and assumed secret relationships that were snuffed out by mainstream reporting.

Everyone then and now knew James Baldwin was an open homosexual man. Yet, his face, his words, to elevate equality for the black race is prominent. Not his sexuality and preference. We have always known in our community who was different, and in many cases they were left to be. They sang in our choirs at church, they showed up to cookouts and family reunions, we did not need a curriculum to tell us what we already know about our community.

What is most fascinating is that when the topics of CRT comes up, I often wonder why the anglo experience of homosexuality is never included. After all, much of the Roman and Grecian lifestyle was steeped in crude forms of pedophilia and homosexuality. Yet we are always reminded through their mediums of television, broadcast news, and google searches of their god like superiority above all.

We are always reminded of their great technological advancements, as well as their engineering excellence. Whether or not they are homosexual or hetrosexual never comes up. Until it is convenient. The point being, this is what happens when you let other people either siphon information to you who are not from you, as well as letting these same people tell your story.

The destruction of the black unit was a byproduct of slavery. Africans brought here had no rights as property. The reason why this is important is because again CRT does not go deep enough into this. When a master race tells its bucks to produce offspring with any one of his slaves, against her and his will, or humiliates and mame the strong one to teach fear and resentment of one another, this harsh fact is never truly touched.

There are people who passed this disease down generationally. An example is when some parents have a newborn and the first place they look is at the child's ears and fingertips to gauge how dark they may be, as if that mattered. Except it did matter in regards to how that child would be treated, not just by white people, but by black people themselves.

By the time we introduce the queer lifestyle, it is never discussed how this gross emasculation was and still is encouraged by the system and within our communities. The constant ingredient is the absence of alpha black men in the home and community. Men were sold off, castrated, lynched and the burden of responsibility fell on the women. Women who had to allow their bodies to be sexually abused by opportunists within the white working ranks of overseers and the masters themselves. We do not get light skinned from the parts of Africa where the slaves were captured except that a white man had his way with slave women who had no voice to offer consent or negate it. They were property. His property, and he could do whatever he wanted with what he owned. This happens by removing the one thing that threatens the establishment. That black man that stands up and rises against the machine.

To this day you will find more stories about women creating programs for women and girls in tech related fields, or addressals for academia and corporate successes than black men. Typically if a black man makes a program it's either inclusive to black boys and girls, or it is inclusive to all children period. However, these programs seldom, if ever, get the amount of sunshine cast upon it from the shade that is cast by our women for women developed platforms. The tone is, if you do not dribble, score a touchdown or hit a home run for the plantation, then the system does not acknowledge your existence. This is intentional because there is no community without unity.

Until we reconnect purposefully our core family unit, we will always take orders from a position of servitude instead of an equitable platform. This is why it is important to unplug even if it is for the briefest of moments.

JUST IN CASE AND JUST IN TIME

My dear earth sharers in the republican party and anywhere else you are. There are some of us who prioritize people's lives and children's lives over your contributions and faithfully adhere to the right you think you have to bear arms. Now hear this, Tennessee Congressmen your actions made two Justins heroes across the world. I call Justin Jones 'Case' and Justin Pearson 'Time' double Justices and as one who believes that names have meanings I am thrilled to say "just in case" and 'just in time". Okay, so I know it is difficult for you to watch your leader, former president Donald Trump be arrested and arraigned last week and by your own admission difficult to see the storming of the capital on January 6th but and "big but" they are not comparable. Donald broke laws and the January 6th rioters broke laws. That is why they got arrested. The two Justins and Gloria Johnson, who was not expelled, were representing the moral civil obedience laws that are part of the constitution. Yes, the power signs and the bull horns may have been disturbing to your decorum but not as disturbing as the deaths in the school of three nine year olds and three adults; five whites and one black since skin color is so important to you. Those people have the same rights to life as you do. How dare you expel these two young men because they disturb your decorum.

In North Carolina, Tricia Cotham, a Democrat representing the Mecklenburg district switched his party affiliation from Democrat to Republican, giving the GOP a veto proof majority in the state legislature. She says she switched because fellow Democrats have been unkind to her and her family but I say, I'm sorry if that is true; however, your fellow colleagues didn't vote for you and that is who you were elected to represent. You should have resigned. These tactics which I consider dishonest might be what Republicans should consider when trying to get African Americans to switch to their party. They simply don't have belief systems that are similar to mine. They don't think the way I do concerning leadership, abortion, gay rights, etc. I don't believe in authoritarian policies. I don't believe it in my life, my home, my neighborhood, my church, my job, etc. I do not believe that their beliefs and ways are good for democracy. Even when they could use their influence for positive change they, in my opinion, use portions for personal gain. Take Clarence Thomas for example. As a Supreme Court Justice, he and his wife have been given "beyond" luxury vacations, costing tens of thousands of dollars by a rich Republican influencer and he has accepted these trips while not reporting them. Instead he has been caught on video tape suggesting such ridiculous verbiage that "he'd prefer to spend vacations in a Walmart parking lot observing regular people". Who does that? Could his conscience cause him to feel so guilty that it overrides his common sense recognition that regular people visit beaches or museums or parks, etc. on vacation. The other seems creepy to me. So all these things that happened last week are for me examples of why Republicans don't get my vote. If they can't look in the mirror and see themselves, whatever will it take for them to see me and mine?

Passing a gun law that allows anybody to carry a gun without having a license to carry or a background check is also a problem. Especially since there is one place people can't carry guns. Guess where? Not churches, not schools, not on my job or yours, but the place where "they" assemble. They protect themselves while creating an open gun carry for me and you. Now what kind of representation is that? I hope you get my point. The attitudes and behaviors of these people have become more selfish and more arrogant rather than more inclusive and people focused. They are leaning on the old ideas of the constitution while ignoring children being killed in classrooms across the nation, seemingly without empathy and definitely without impunity.

THEY'RE NOT BEING PAID

Board service is an honor. Yes, it's a volunteer position. Yes, it takes time away from other things you could be doing. But at the same time each board member receives so much from their participation. Or at least they have the opportunity to receive – if they participate. Here's what we mean.

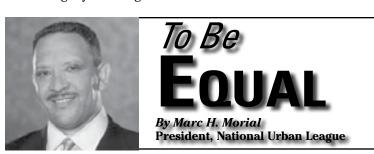

As a board member – or other volunteer – you make a commitment to the quality and welfare of your community. You come together with others to help advance the values you believe in. Together you and your fellow board members bring a shared vision to life. Because of you there are new hospitals, new public policies, beautiful art, children who read above grade level, and seniors who don't have to choose between food and medications. You are the part of the process that helps an addicted mother turn her life around. You helped make the decision to raise money so that children have safe places to engage after school: their laughter is your reward.

Nonprofit board members aren't paid in cash. They are paid with the quiet pride they carry inside themselves: that feeling of being part of something larger, something meaningful, something that may help them personally, but that will definitely help others. They are just as busy as everyone else – maybe more so. But they make time and are rewarded. They receive the opportunity to use their skills and talents for the betterment of others. They have the privilege of working shoulder-to-shoulder with others who each bring a piece of the solution to the table. In this world where so many feel isolated, they have the opportunity to be part of something that is bigger than themselves and that can accomplish more than they could on their own.

Here's what we know. Working with a nonprofit is not a chore. It is a platform through which we can share our skills and leadership. It's an opportunity to be a role model to our associates, family, and the next generation, no matter how young we are. The only way to unlock these treasures is to consciously volunteer. If you are asked to serve as a board member, take a moment to decide how you will make time to be of service. Ask what your responsibilities will be, and how long you are expected to serve. You need to know these things so that you can make your service a priority. You don't have to volunteer for a lifetime, but when you do, you need to be able to fulfill your commitment.

Your board service is an honor and an opportunity to create a better world. You don't need to be paid in cash for this: volunteers are paid with the opportunity to make an impact and leave a legacy. Nothing is richer.

I was arrested during a protest at the same embassy just

I was arrested during a protest at the same embassy just a few months later. It remains among the great honors of my life to have stood in that movement alongside the man who was singularly responsible for forcing the United States to confront the apartheid regime in South Africa.

Robinson died last week at the age of 81.

That July 1985 protest drew 1,500 people, most of whom were there to take part in the National Urban League Conference where U.S. policy toward South Africa was a major theme. During the demonstration, before he and Jacob were arrested, Robinson said they were delivering "the knock of freedom on the door of the South African Embassy."

Within a little more than a year, Congress would override President Ronald Reagan's veto and impose economic sanctions against South Africa. The resulting withdrawal of large, multinational corporations crippled the South African economy.

Robinson and the organization he founded in 1977 are best known for their role in ending apartheid. But the movement grew out of opposition to U.S. policy toward the former Republic of Rhodesia, then under white minority rule

"It was 1976, and I was working for Charlie Diggs [then-chairman of House foreign affairs subcommittee on Africa], when several of us became concerned about the administration's handling of the Rhodesia issue," Robinson said in 1993. "Diggs and Andy Young called together some 120 black leaders to figure out what we ought to do. I was named chair of a working group charged with organizing an institution to galvanize black public opinion in support of U.S. Africa policy. That was the beginning of TransAfrica."

Robinson's 27-day hunger strike in 1994 pressured the Clinton Administration into changing its policy of turning away Haitian refugees without a hearing.

"My view has always been ... it doesn't matter whether a country is black or white, left or right, you judge human rights observance with the same yardstick," he told his hometown newspaper, "And where I have seen human rights abuse, I have criticized it with as much tenacity as I can muster. And that's been the case in Ethiopia, it's been the case in Liberia, it's been the case in Zaire, it's been the case, of course, in South Africa. And it's been the case in Haiti."

Though I still was a teenager when Robinson founded TransAfrica and focused the nation's attention on human rights abuses there, he inspired me as few others before or since. In the early 1980s, I was part of a leadership team of National Black Law Students Association that pushed for divestment of South African investments by U.S. companies.

I had the privilege of serving with Robinson as a panelist for Tavis Smiley's State of the Black Union forum in 2009. By then he had been living for several years in St. Kitts, where he emigrated out of frustration toward the nation's exploitation of people of color and the poor.

"I tried to love America, its credos, its ideals, its promise, its process," Robinson wrote in Quitting America: The Departure of a Black Man From His Native Land. "I have tried to love America but America would not love the ancient, full African whole of me."

The National Urban League mourns his passing and honors his legacy by striving to hold America to its credos, its ideals, and its promise.
