

Study Shows Insurance Industry Price-Gouges Businesses

Center for Justice & Democracy (CJ&D) and Consumer Federation of America (CFA) released How the Cash Rich Insurance Industry Fakes Crises and Invents Social Inflation1 (hereinafter referred to as Fake Social Inflation). At that point in time, businesses were seeing insurance rates increase (also known as a "hard market") after 13 years of low or stable rates (also known as a "soft market"). The CJ&D and CFA study documented in significant detail how the overcapitalized property/casualty insurance industry was charging many businesses far too much in premiums while threatening even greater increases, all while attempting to create the perception that it was too financially troubled to pay claims and blaming a concept they invented: "social inflation."

The report also took a historical look at the up and down economic cycle of the insurance industry, and showed how, since the 1970s, insurance companies have not been forthcoming about why jumps in insurance premiums happen. Put simply, premiums go up and down in sync with a well-established cycle and are never reflective of any trends in paid claims. This has been confirmed by decades of insurance loss and pre-

For example, in the decade before Fake Social Inflation was released in 2020, the industry's own data

In early March 2020 — days be- and growth of population. In order fore the COVID pandemic hit – the to increase premiums in 2019 at the start of the most recent hard market, insurers used an accounting trick to inflate their "incurred losses" by increasing or padding reserves — the money set aside to pay claims - despite, at the same moment, experiencing no increase in payouts or any trend suggesting large future payouts. This "over-reserving" is part of a decades- long pattern, often politically inspired and used by insurers as a way to show poor income statements, which it then uses to falsely claim large "losses" and, in turn, to justify imposition of large premium increases.

As shown throughout the Fake Social Inflation study, a great deal of industry coordination is necessary to push the country into a hard insurance market, because the entire industry must collude and raise rates together. As part of their narrative, industry leaders publicly spin the notion that the industry is financially beleaguered and cannot pay claims without significantly raising rates. The most common story presented historically by industry leaders is that lawyers, lawsuits, judges, and juries have suddenly and jointly become more "aggressive" after not being this way for the 10 to 15 years of the prior soft market. This alleged aggression only lasts three to four years, after which the lawyers, juries, and judges apparently become meek showed that total commercial insuragain. It is a narrative used not only ance payouts had not spiked and to push for a cycle turn but also to generally tracked the rate of inflation maintain rate hikes for the entirety of a three-to- four-year hard market, which we are still in.

To make the case for the current hard market, the insurance industry settled on a new PR term - "social inflation" - to cover a number of wildly disconnected things that corporate and insurance lawyers complain cause them to lose cases and increase payments to claimants. These include: #MeToo and child sexual abuse claims; lawyer advertising and case funding; securities class actions; millennials as jurors; and verdicts in worsening truck crashes. There has been little consistency regarding industry descriptions of social inflation. What's more, as shown in Fake Social Inflation, others within the industry privately doubted its existence. Nonetheless, in 2019, insurance industry representatives began a coordinated effort to market the idea that "social inflation" was hurting insurers financially.

The term never caught on with the general public, or at least much beyond insurance industry trade publications. Perhaps this was due to the fuzziness of the term, or its confusion with economic inflation — an actual global problem. Or maybe it was the fact that complaining about jurors — aside from juries being a bedrock element of the U.S.

Constitution - seemed absurd when juries resolve an extremely low percentage of state tort cases and large verdicts are almost never paid. In fact, experts write that civil jury trials have been "nearly eradicated" when there weren't any. Now, the disclosure that the insurance industry was sitting on an $800 billion record surplus — a surplus that quickly grew to over one trillion dollars by the end of 2021.

And then, just a few months after the hard market kicked in, we were in a global pandemic. When COVID hit, courthouses shut down. Jury trials stopped. New case filings dropped. Tort caseloads in state trial courts - already representing an extremely low percentage of incoming civil caseloads — dropped by over 4 percent between 2019 and 2020, and continued to drop in 2021. Juries resolved an extremely low percentage of state tort cases in 2020, with rates ranging from 0.0 to 1.59 percent. In 2021, the range was 0.0 to 1.79 percent. This rate has remained incredibly low for the past decade.

In addition, for months during the height of the pandemic, people stopped driving. The public drastically cut down on non-essential medical care. At the same time most states passed laws immunizing hospitals and nursing homes from liability. In sum, no one believed that suspended jury trials, non-existent victims, or lawyers who couldn't get their cases heard could possibly be driving insurance rate hikes. And now, the civil justice system has a backlog so large that "the already rare civil jury trial is likely to lay dormant for the foreseeable future."

Yet almost as if to demonstrate the meaninglessness of the "social inflation" concept, insurance industry consultants and representatives were so fully invested in their anti-jury PR strategy that they never stopped complaining about jury verdicts even in this country. Or perhaps it was the industry is clearly struggling to make sense of the term. For example, medical liability insurer The Doctors Company recently issued the Medical Malpractice Claims-Made Social Inflation and Loss Development Report, accompanied by a press release with a screaming headline about how social inflation causes billions in medical malpractice losses. Yet a quick look through this report finds, among other things, that medical malpractice claims have actually been dropping and social inflation has, according to the Doctors Company, "disappeared."

Of course, it never existed in the first place, particularly when it came to medical malpractice. As we demonstrated in Fake Social Inflation and show again here, for decades insurers have misrepresented their actual losses, sometimes by large percentages. The result is that doctors were and continue to be unfairly price-gouged.

For five decades, businesses and consumers have been victims of periodic eruptions in insurance premiums caused by the property/casualty insurance industry's economic cycle, the industry's unique accounting methods, and laws that allow anticompetitive pricing by this industry. While insurers try to convince the public that lawsuits and juries, or "social inflation," are to blame, historical data are clear that this has never been true — and it is not true today. The only way to stop volcanic eruptions in insurance premiums is through better oversight and regulation of the industry's mismanaged accounting, particularly of padded reserves, and the cyclical nature of the insurance business.

NC Lawmakers Target Wasteful Spending In Tuesday's Government Efficiency Hearing

By Jordan Meadows

The North Carolina House Select Committee on Government Efficiency convened Tuesday morning in the NC General Assembly Legislative Building to discuss how the state can better manage taxpayer dollars and reduce wasteful spending. The meeting included testimony from State Auditor Dave Boliek and Deputy Secretary of Services David Elliott, with input from a bipartisan group

The committee was formed earlier this year by House Speaker Rep. Destin Hall (R-Caldwell, Watauga), who stated in a January press release, "Unnecessary government bloat and waste hurt North Carolina taxpayers' wallets and divert funds that could be used for core functions such as public safety and education."

Key members of the committee include Rep. John Torbett (R-Gaston), Rep. Keith Kidwell (R-Beaufort, Dare, Hyde, Pamlico), Rep. Zack Hawkins (D-Durham), and Rep. Phil Rubin (D-Wake).

'What we're trying to do is view audits, our results, and our recommendations through not the lens of what needs to be cut but from the lens of what is the return on investment that the taxpayers are getting from appropriations that flow from this body," Boliek said.

He emphasized that the auditor's role is to act as the investigative arm of the state, analyzing how public funds are used, how agencies are run, and how data can support better budget decisions. Boliek also noted that his office is actively monitoring state appropriations to enhance transparency.

Discussing regulatory disparities across the state, Boliek pointed out the stark contrast between rapidly growing regions and those still struggling economically.

There's developing NC, we're sitting right here in the epicenter of each university to buy an individual growth in this state, Mecklenburg set, when Hawkins argues buying for County, and the surrounding counties, and the Triad," Boliek said.

He pointed to Rep. Shelly Willingham's district that runs from Rocky Mount to the Albemarle Sound as a contrast: "Some communities never recovered from Hurricane Floyd in 1999. It's those communities that need the other type of regulatory assistance: they may not need people to get out of the way, they may need people to come in and invest dollars to get a return on investment from their tax dollars."

Rep. Zack Hawkins raised concerns about inefficiencies in the state's public university and community college systems. North Carolina munity colleges, many of which independently purchase software and technology systems. It is important that we don't wait until the red flag is waving; that we have a systematic approach,' Hawkins said. "Why is each campus buying things individually when they all use some of the same processes?" Hawkins argued that standardizing purchases across the system would reduce costs and eliminate redundancy: If one university buys a new set of upgraded software, and the others don't, the state is spending more money by using funding for all of them would lower the total cost and prevent additional future pur-

Rep. Phil Rubin shifted the focus to staffing issues in the state's prison system, particularly the low wages paid to correctional officers.

"Our Department of Adult Corrections does not pay enough. This leads to substantive issues about safety and recidivism, but it's actually a waste of money because you're spending money on dealing with this constant thrash of retraining new correctional officers because you can't keep people—that costs money," Rubin said.

He cited data showing that North nationally for correctional officer salaries. However, he insisted that current pay rates are contributing to a cycle of high turnover, training costs, and unstaffed prison facilities.

"Our prisons are functioning on safety only; they're not trying to rehabilitate anyone-they don't have the staff. We can't operate all the beds in our prisons, because we don't have enough officers to keep them safe," Rubin added.

David Elliott, the Deputy Secretary of Services, discussed the importance of fuel procurement for state operations. His office oversees contracts that bring in approximately $8 billion a year.

ruel is one of the most important commodities in North Carolina. They run the school buses to the ferries to our emergency responders to work in Western NC. It is essential; North Carolina does not function without fuel," Elliott said.

His remarks highlighted the need for careful negotiation of fuel contracts to ensure that state operations remain uninterrupted and cost-effec-

As the committee continues its work, members aim to identify strategies for better resource allocation, costsaving measures, and ways to ensure that all North Carolinians-regardless of region—see a return on their

STATE LEADERS AND ADVOCATES GATHER FOR FIRST BLACK YOUTH SUICIDE PREVENTION CONFERENCE

State officials, mental health advocates, and community members gathered Saturday in Rocky Mount for the Stronger Together conference, North Carolina's first event centered on the state's Black Youth Suicide Prevention Action Plan. The gathering featured community-driven solutions to one of the most pressing public health challenges facing Black youth.

The plan comes as suicide rates among Black youth and young adults have risen sharply nationwide. In North Carolina, from 2013 to 2022, 377 Black North Carolinians ages 10 to 24 died by suicide, according to state data.

Nearly 17% of Black high school students said they had seriously considered suicide, while more than a third of middle schoolers reported the same. The numbers peak at age 24 — and are especially stark for Black girls questioning their sexual orientation, who now report the highest rates of suicide attempts

"This is about empowering communities and tapping into their inherent strengths," said Kelly Crosbie, director of the state's Division of Mental Health, Developmental Disabilities and Substance Use Services. "I would much prefer that kids get the support they need well before they have a crisis.'

In her speech on Saturday, Crosbie noted youth ages 10 to 18 are now the largest group calling the national 988 crisis hotline, a statistic she described as both "good and shocking."

The conference drew dozens of participants despite early funding challenges. Dr. Rodney Harris, who coordinated the event, described it as the product of grassroots persistence. "We're creating a coalition that saves lives," Harris said in a speech. "This is love in action, because this is the essence of community and family.

The day included workshops, a documentary screening, and panel discussions led by young advocates. Panelists spoke candidly about the stigma surrounding mental health in Black communities, particularly the pressure on young men to suppress emotions. They urged peers to seek connection rather than isolation.

"Being vulnerable or asking for help does not make you weak. It actually makes you stronger," said Nautica McCoy, a member of the North Carolina

(See BLACK YOUTH SUICIDE, P. 5)

AMID BUDGET CRISIS The City of Rocky Mount is addressing a serious financial crisis uncovered by a recent comprehensive budget review, the city announced today. The review, conducted by the city's new city manager, revealed that for over two years, the city has spent millions more each month than it received, requiring immediate action to protect vital services.

ROCKY MOUNT ANNOUNCES FINANCIAL RECOVERY PLAN

These findings are troubling, and the city is hiring an independent forensic accounting firm to further investigate," Rocky Mount City Manager Elton Daniels said. "We will share those results publicly when we can."

In 2023, city council members Knight and Blackwell were suspicious about city management and voiced their concerns publicly— others were unconvinced until data was produced verifying the broad and deep concerns. By August 2024, the majority of the city council voted to place the city manager on administrative leave, though no fiscal changes were initiated until Manager Daniels' team discovered the deficit.

To address the crisis, the city will reduce spending by at least $30 million over the next 10 months. This includes freezing non-essential projects, pausing capital initiatives, and reducing staff, with at least 10% of full-time employees and half of part-time staff facing layoffs. The city will do its best to help them land on their feet, including providing full-time employees with transition assistance.

An Explaination Of How Cashless Bail Works And Why Trump Is Targeting It

By Amanda Hernández

Stateline

When President Donald Trump signed an executive order last month threatening to withhold federal funding from states and localities that have adopted "cashless bail" policies, he escalated a national fight over how courts decide who should remain behind bars before trial.

The move has already rippled into state capitols. In North Carolina, Republican lawmakers are considering legislation this week that would tighten pretrial release rules after a high-profile fatal stabbing on a commuter train last month.

The bill, which was first introduced in March and altered earlier this week with the title "Iryna's Law," would require people to post money bail for certain offenses and would restrict judicial discretion for violent and repeat offenders. The bill also would add a new category of violent offenses that require specific pretrial conditions, such as electronic monitoring. It passed the state Senate on Monday.

"When we were looking at drafting this bill, a lot of it was looking at the situation that happened in Charlotte," said North Carolina state Sen. Danny Britt, a Republican and criminal defense attorney, to WRAL-TV.

In New York, Republican lawmakers are pushing to advance legislation that would further limit pretrial release and allow judges to weigh a defendant's "dangerousness" in setting conditions. New York ended bail for most misdemeanors and nonviolent felonies in 2019, but has since scaled back the law at least three times to allow judges more discre-

And in Texas — where legislators passed new bail restrictions earlier this summer — voters in November will consider a constitutional amendment banning bail altogether in certain cases for violent offenses such as murder, aggravated assault and indecency with a child. Trump signed the cashless bail order three days after Iryna Zarutska, a 23-year-old Ukrainian refugee. was killed in a seemingly random stabbing in Charlotte, North Carolina. The suspect, who has a lengthy criminal record, had been released without bond last winter after being charged with misusing the 911 sys-Trump's order directs U.S. Attorney General Pam Bondi to identify which jurisdictions have "substantially eliminated cash bail," though it does not define what that means leaving its scope and enforcement unclear. Some legal experts say they happened with previous efforts to tie federal funding to state or local poli-

Trump issued the directive alongside another order aimed at Washington, D.C., where he declared a "crime emergency" and sought to roll back the city's decades-old bail law. The district did not fully eliminate cash bail when it passed its Bail Reform Act in 1992, but judges are required to consider nonfinancial conditions — such as electronic monitoring, curfews or check-ins before setting a monetary bond.

Trump's orders are part of his broader crackdown on crime and public safety, which has also included deploying the National Guard to Memphis, Tennessee; Washington, D.C., and Los Angeles.

Same charge, different outcomes Cash bail is a guarantee to show up to court: A defendant pays money and is allowed to go home. At the end of their case, they may get the money back. A judge or magistrate may set the amount based on the severity of the charge and whether the defendant is considered a flight or safety risk.

But someone unable to pay the bail, even after being charged with a

(See CASHLESS BAIL, P. 7)

A Commentary By John Washington: AWOL Black Fathers When my mother called me in The poverty programs back then from play one afternoon to meet the ware designed to a real to a from play one afternoon to meet the man seated in our living room, her introduction was redundant-I immediately knew who he was. And, right off, I did not like him. His absence had been a painful matter in my life. The house that we lived in explained some of it. It was unfit for human tenancy—a decaying hovel with a leaking roof, creaking structures, and a termite infestation. I was ashamed to let anyone other than my closest friends know where

I was 12 that year of 1956. This was the Jim Crow South where poverty was the default condition of the black masses. Black males were restricted to the lowly crafts of ditch digger, janitor, and farmer, unless they catered directly to the black community, in which case the jobs of preacher, teacher, and shopowner were also open. Most worked the hardscrabble categories so there was poverty all around, and since my mother was the only breadwinner, our poverty was wretched.

But this is not a story of black victimhood. This is, instead, an essay about a flaw in black culture that is just as uncomfortable for me to speak about as it is for my black brothers and sisters to hear. But a problem must be acknowledged before it can be fixed. And the failure of black fathers is among the worst problems afflicting our community.

My mother was a maid. Since her $25-a-week salary did not go very far, I was a skinny kid with a constant cold, owing to a poor diet and a house that grew Arctic in the winter months. There was a wood stove in the living room and another in the kitchen but their heat did not radiate beyond those rooms. We only ever used the kitchen stove for cooking in order to save fuel. To keep warm during winter, we slept under five blankets. If a glass of water was left out overnight, it had iced over by morning. There was no hot running were designed to ensure survival. They were not like those today which help a person through life. Even if programs like those had been available, my mother's stubborn pride would not have allowed her to use them. I am not criticizing the safety net of our current welfare system. I am a liberal. But my mother's code of honor was simply part of who she was-a tough lady.

Most devastating for me was the psychological impact of my father's absence. The most miserable moments of my childhood were when other kids asked me where my father was. In the days before we understood conception, I could just tell them that I just didn't have one. But after we all learned a bit of biology, the question became so upsetting that on a few occasions I had to walk away from play activities.

I didn't know what to tell them because my mother refused to speak of this man, even when I asked. He was a forbidden topic in her house, and so I learned to keep my mouth shut. I found out later from an uncle that my father regularly beat my mother which is why she divorced him when I was born. This shows her grit and gumption, for in those days, women could scarcely fend for themselves economically, and so battered wives were condemned to suffer as punching bags. But not my mother.

Growing up without a dad made me feel as though I lacked the full humanity and manhood of my cousins, friends, and classmates. From what I can recall, every other black home seemed to have a father. Southern blacks were already second-class citizens and I felt even lower than those around me. And since I did not have the self-confidence and self-esteem of my male peers, I sought adventures later in life to compensate. In the Army, I volunteered for paratroop units, fought in Vietnam, and was disciplined for insubordination four times. I boxed as an amateur. I drove at 120 miles an hour on the German Autobahn. I ran marathons. I worked as a demolitions specialist and as a long-haul truck driver. And I would hang out with some of the most ferocious males I could find.

Does the criminal behavior of some young black males today owe something to a sense of lost masculinity? I feel sure that this is so. A friend who works as an Army recruiter told me that so many black males have criminal records, the military is no longer the instrument for building machismo that it was when I joined. So, in inner-city communities where viciousness defines manhood, darker paths have become

In 1965, a controversial report entitled "The Negro Family: A Case of National Action" was published by Daniel Patrick Moynihan, a sociologist working at the Labor Department. Moynihan concluded that a lot of the social problems affecting American blacks owed to the disintegration of the black family. "At the heart of the deterioration of the fabric of Negro society," he wrote, "is the deterioration of the Negro family. It is the fundamental source of the weakness of the Negro community at the present time." He went

As a direct result of this high rate of divorce, separation, and desertion, a very large percent of Negro families are headed by females. While the percentage of such families among whites has been dropping since 1940, it has been rising among Negroes.

The percent of nonwhite families headed by a female is more than double the percent for whites. Fatherless nonwhite families increased by a sixth between 1950 and 1960, but held constant for white families.

It has been estimated that only a minority of Negro children reach the age of 18 having lived all their lives with both of their parents.

Once again, this measure of family disorganization is found to be diminishing among white families and increasing among Negro families.

These figures were troubling, but they only offered a hint of what was to come. By the time the "Moynihan Report, Revisited" was published in 2013, 73 percent of black children were born to unmarried mothers. The figure for non-Hispanic white children was 29 percent:

I was stunned. A few months ago, I mentioned this to a black activist who was working on the problem of black violence in a nearby town. He had been trying to figure out why violence seemed to be endemic among their young black males and had reached a dead end. When I suggested that father-absence was not properly socializing black youth and asked him if he had read the Moynihan Report, he told me that the report was written by racist rightwingers determined to condemn blacks for their own misfortunes. I didn't bring it up with him again. For now, the town's solution is recre-

It was not the first time I had heard the report dismissed in this way. It was basically the attitude of the black community upon the report's publication. The backlash from the community was so militant and damning-reviling its author in the process-that the Johnson Administration dropped the issue and turned its attention to the Vietnam War. This reaction was not entirely surprising, given the demonization of blacks by many whites since first contact in the 1400s. Denigration used to justify outrageous and dehumanizing treatment produced a hypersensitivity among blacks that reflexively prevents us from accepting criticism from outsiders. Criticism from insiders has become something

I understand this, owing to some tormented me, and it was me.

I have experienced. I have been beaten by whites and called a nigger. I have been refused jobs, and was denied the right to vote in my state after I returned dazed and traumatized from the blood-spattered jungles of Vietnam. However, America has changed enormously since my youth and some of us do not seem to want to leave the dark caves of slavery and Jim Crow behind. Yes, racism persists, but it is no longer the principal cause of our damnation; that spot has been seized by cultural deviance. Progress cannot be made until we admit this and free ourselves from self-victimization.

Moral responsibility is something I had to discover for myself on a personal level. One morning in August 2018, I awoke on the floor of my dining room caked in my own vomit and too drunk to pull myself up to answer the doorbell. It was not the first time that this had happened during my decades of drinking. As I struggled to my knees, retching, I had an epiphany-I understood that I did not have to continue to live my life like this.

I had isolated myself in my house for a two-week binge during which I had hallucinated at night and did not eat properly or shower or shave for days. Twice retired, I had all the money necessary for my survival, and my drinking buddies resupplied me with wine, food (when I was able to get it down), and all of the companionship and merriment I needed until I passed out. I had started drinking after my infantry tour in Vietnam where I lost 48 friends. My miserable psyche refused to leave the battlefield, and now I had the memories of two broken marriages to add to those of an unhappy childhood. Booze gushed into my life like monsoon rain.

But as I staggered about the house trying to orient myself, I realized that I had to find a new and better path. I did not have to self-destruct. Even though I felt that my life's circumstances had flung me into a chasm of despair, it was up to me to find a way to shoulder my troubles and go on. The house stank of the litter and wine bottles that were flung about. As I gagged on a glass of wine to calm my shakes, I took an honest look at myself and I did not like what I saw. I finally understood that I had to stop using my past as a scapegoat. I was face to face with the ogre who

Mr. James H. Young And The Fight For Black Political Power In North Carolina

By Jordan Meadows

James Hunter Young, born into slavery on October 26, 1858, near Henderson, North Carolina, rose from the brutal confines of bondage to become one of the most influential Black political figures in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Young was the son of an enslaved woman owned by Captain Demetrius Ellis Young and a white man of prominence in Vance County-Isaac Jones Young-who acknowledged his son and took responsibility for his education.

This early support enabled James H. Young to attend school in Henderson before enrolling at Shaw University in Raleigh in 1874. Although he left Shaw in 1877 to take a position in the Internal Revenue Service under Colonel J. J. Young, his connection to the university and to the city of Raleigh would remain

It was this job in the revenue office that sparked Young's involvement with the Republican Party. He became a delegate to the Republican state convention in 1880 and, by 1882, had climbed to the rank of chief clerk and cashier in the Fourth District revenue office. Despite his political rise, Young's career suffered its first major setback when Democratic President Grover Cleveland took office in 1885, replacing Young with a white Democrat.

Nevertheless, Young retained help within the Black community, strong local Republican support, and by December 1886, he was serving as and political organization. chief clerk in the office of the Register of Deeds in Wake County. sitioned nim as a central figure in was appointed a special inspector of customs and later nominated by President Benjamin Harrison for the powerful role of Collector of the Port of Wilmington. Fierce opposition from white Democrats blocked his confirmation. When Cleveland returned to the presidency in 1893, Young was again removed from his federal post.

Rather than retreat, Young responded to these political defeats by turning to media and advocacy. That same year, he purchased the Raleigh Gazette, which became the leading Black Republican newspaper in North Carolina. As editor until 1898, Young used the publication to advance causes like education, moral development, and economic self-

while also promoting racial uplift

Young was also a key architect of the "Fusion" movement—a strategic Young's growing prominence alliance between the Republican within the Republican Party po- and Populist parties aimed at ending Democratic dominance in the state the politics of Reconstruction and His efforts helped rally skeptical the years that followed. In 1889, he Black voters and unify diverse political interests.

> As a result, he was elected to the North Carolina House of Representatives from Wake County in 1894 and again in 1896. While in office, he served on several influential committees and was a fierce advocate for educational reform, penal improvements, and enhanced opportunities for Black citizens, including successful efforts to amend Raleigh's city charter for fairer Black representa-

> One of his crowning political achievements was his role in the 1896 election of Daniel L. Russell, the Fusionist governor of North Carolina. Governor Russell rewarded (See JAMES H. YOUNG, P. 11)

Democrats Pour Millions Into White Media, But They Continue To Starve The Black Press

By Stacy M. Brown

... $45.00

..Adria Jervav

Black Press USA

Democrats lost the 2024 election in part because they abandoned the Black Press—the voice of Black America. Black voters, the backbone of the party, walked away in numbers unseen in modern times. At the very moment when all Americans-Black, white, Latino, and others—are called to stand against authoritarianism, Democrats have shown not courage but cowardice, not gratitude but contempt for their own base.

The numbers tell the story. House Democrats proudly announced a $3 million ad blitz hitting Republicans over tariffs and the looming shutdown. The DNC spent big on a paid campaign blanketing Wisconsin newspapers to attack Elon Musk during a state Supreme Court election. They rolled out a five-figure ad buy targeting Tennessee Republicans with Epstein-related attacks. The DCCC unleashed a national ad campaign aimed at Latino, Black, and AANHPI voters, blaming Republicans for back-to-school prices, followed by another round of ads-its first national digital buy of the 2026 jeopardizing rural hospitals. Millions for consultants, millions for TV, millions for newspaper spreads One could make the case that in majority-white outlets. But when it comes to the Black Press of America-a network of 200 Black-owned newspapers and media companies, many run by Black women-Democrats turn their pockets inside out. This is no small network. The Black Press has the potential to reach more than 30 million readers, viewers, and subscribers every week through its newspapers, websites, social platforms, and daily broadcasts. It has never asked for handouts, only a fair shake. Yet, despite all their boasts of diversity, Democrats have invested nothing close to the millions they shovel elsewhere. And this betrayal comes at a historic moment: the Black Press is approaching its 200th anniversary in 2027. Founded in 1827 by John B. Russwurm and Samuel Cornish with the bold declaration, "We wish to plead our own cause. For too long others have spoken for us," the Black Press has carried that mission through every trial of Black America.

Yet today, as it struggles financially to reach that milestone, the very voters has turned its back.

During the pandemic, Democrats flocked to the Black Press' daily broadcast, Let It Be Known. They wanted to be platformed, wanted their voices carried into Black homes. But once they were elected, the same voices that begged for space disappeared. What remains is foul lip service, the kind that sounds no different from Trump's contempt for diversity. The insult is deeper when measured against history. Frederick Douglass thundered through The North Star. Ida B. Wells laid bare the horror of lynching through the Memphis Free Speech. The Chicago Defender carried the voices of the Great Migration and showed the mutilated body of Emmett Till. The Afro American chronicled Jackie Robinson and Martin Luther King Jr.

When Tulsa burned, white mobs destroyed Black newspapers to smother the truth. When Dr. King wrote from Birmingham Jail, it was the Black Press that carried his words. When the Wilmington Ten were caged, it was the Black Press that refused to look away. And today, the torch is still burning. April cycle-hammering Republicans for party that owes its survival to Black D. Ryan is today's Alice Dunnigan. Lauren Burke is today's Ethel Payne. Sam P.K. Collins is a modern-day Marcus Garvey. HBCU students have both interned and currently work full-time with the Black Press. The Black Press is not dead history—it is a living force.

So, let the question be asked plainly: if the RNC wrote checks tomorrow to the Black Press, would Democrats call us sellouts? Would they smear us while continuing to funnel millions into papers and platforms that do not speak to our communities?

The truth is this: Democrats have betrayed the very institution that has carried them time and again. They can spend $3 million to flood swing districts, or blanket Wisconsin papers with anti-Musk ads, or pump cash into flashy social media buys—but they cannot find equity for the Black Press. That betrayal is why the party lost ground in 2024. And unless Democrats reckon with their disdain for the Black Press, they will learn again in 2026 and 2028 what they began to taste already: abandonment at the ballot box, silence from the very people whose voices they have chosen to ignore www.TheJervayAgency.com Member: North Carolina Black Publishers Association National Newspaper Publishers Association HUB Certified MWBE

money orders payable to The Carolinian.

One Year ...

Publisher....

The Publisher is not responsible for the return of unsolicited news, pictures or advertising copy unless necessary postage accompanies the copy. Opinions expressed by columnists in this newspaper do not necessarily represent the policy of the newspaper.

n. call (919) 834-5558, or email

DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSIONS IS OCTOBER 10TH AT 5:00 PM

The Carolinian

(ISSN 00455873)

1504 New Bern Ave, Raleigh, North Carolina 27610

Mailing Address: P.O. Box 25308

Raleigh, North Carolina 27611

Periodical Postage Paid at Raleigh North Carolina 27611

Warrenton Address: P.O. Box 536

Warrenton, NC 27589

Rocky Mount Address: 120 N Franklin St

Rocky Mount, NC 27804 Postmaster

Send all address changes to: The Carolinian 1504 New Bern Avenue

Raleigh, NC 27610 PUBLISHED SIX TIMES MONTHLY SUBSCRIPTION RATES

Payable in advance. Address all communications and make all checks and

Founded by P.R. Jervay, Sr. in 1940

The Carolinian Newspaper, Inc. of Raleigh

Sales Consultant......Paul R. Jervay, Jr.

Circulation Manager Andrew Alston

Jervay Agency, National Advertising Representative

Phone: 919-834-5558 e-mail: info@caro.news Facebook: TheCaroNews Twitter: @TheCaroNews

To SUBSCRIBE To The Carolinian

call us at 919-834-5558 or visit us online at www.CARO.news

Business & Finance

Fewer Households, Businesses Will Get High-Speed Internet Under New Plan

dents of Roane County, West Virginia, enjoy living among the rolling mountains and winding, two-lane roads. Situated between Charleston and Parkersburg, two of the state's largest cities, the rural county is known for its small towns and his-

That's how Sherry Husted, the director of the Roane County Public Libraries, described her native community as she worked last week at Geary Public Library in Left Hand, West Virginia. Each of the county's three library branches has at least three public computers and free internet access, among other services.

These services are essential to residents living in Roane — where less than 32% of the county's households, businesses and community buildings have reliable internet connectivity, according to the Federal Communications Commission's National Broadband Map.

"We love our rural area," Husted said. "But there's always the catch. You love your rural area, but then access to things is always more lim-

Members of the library staff regularly help patrons fill out job applications and build resumes. They also the county's residents rely on their cellular devices and spotty mobile service, Husted said. Most residents still use landline phones, she added.

And those with internet access at home are paying a steep price. Husted's plan with Frontier, which includes fiber internet and a landline, comes to $170 a month.

"If you work from home, you need reliable internet," she said. "Frontier does the best they can. But this is a very rural area, so the trees and terrain are constantly messing up the help those who have never used a internet. And because of the demand desktop computer before — many of on these older lines, your internet may not be reliable enough to host things like meetings or classes.'

Roane County is one of the areas federal officials hoped to support through the Broadband Equity, Access, and Deployment Program, or BEAD, a federal grant program meant to expand broadband access. The $42.45 billion initiative, created under the Biden administration's Infrastructure Investment and Jobs Act of 2021, aimed to close the digital divide — with a focus on rural er, have disqualified hundreds of thousands of locations — including homes, businesses and community buildings - from receiving internet access. And the program's new technology-neutral approach will also shift a large portion of the federal funds toward satellite internet companies, including Elon Musk's Starlink, that cost less to build but have more uneven service than underground fiber optic cable. That means households and businesses that were looking forward to reliable, high-speed internet will no longer get support from the BEAD program.

The Trump administration's (See HIGH SPEED INTERNET, P. 11)

While some experts were initially skeptical about the program's goals, every state utilized its allocated funds to develop plans to provide high-speed fiber internet to nearly every home and business in the country, said Christopher Mitchell, the director of the Community Broadband Networks Initiative with the Institute for Local Self-Reliance, an anti-corporate advocacy group.

Most states are expected to get started on deployment projects in 2026. But the Trump administration's changes have undermined the major investment for rural areas, gress, and that means that you need,

at least in the Senate, some bipartisanship in order to pass that 60-vote threshold to break a filibuster. That's what's really gumming up the works right now. Democrats don't feel like they're being included in negotiations, and so they're not likely to agree to a Republican-only budget in

ing. And you still have some divides within the two parties that I think are worth mentioning. One example:

There was a Senate vote just the other day on one of these budget

resolutions, and a couple of Repub-

A lot of the dynamics are still the same. You still have partisan fight-

By Judykay Jefferson

WHAT HAPPENED TO CUSTOMER SERVICE?

Customer service once meant something. You walked into a store, and someone greeted you with a smile. You said, "thank you," and they replied, 'you're welcome." Not "no problem." Not "yep." That's how many of us were Lately, things feel different. Service has gotten faster, yes — more digital, more automated. But it's also gotten... looser. More, too casual. Sometimes

Last weekend, my extended family gathered to celebrate a landmark birthday. There were nine of us in all. We had reservations, ordered a cake, the whole nine yards. We are all adults, working, professional adults. There would be one check, a healthy tip, and pleasantries. These are people who dine out way more than they cook. We selected a restaurant that should have been a solid choice. Nothing could have prepared us for what ensued. Drinks and appetizers vere ordered and served. Entrees were selected, customized and ordered. At this point we had nothing but positive interactions with the staff. The arrangement of the tables pushed together to accommodate our party didn't allow for the server(s) to walk behind those of us seated on the inside. Here is where the drama began. In no particular or strategic order our entrees were served. Some seated on the outside received their food before others seated across from them on the inside. To reach the far side of the table, the served leaned over several diners who had received their plates and were beginning to eat to serve those on the

When the awkward service process was pointed out our main server apologized and came around the table closer to the inside diners. When a man from the kitchen decided to clear some dirty dishes using the same process and he was corrected, his reply was, "Some people don't think it's rude."

That's right. He wanted a debate although that he was advised to, "Let it o." After attempting to have the last word Mr. Table-clearer returned to the kitchen. Within a few minutes, here comes a more than middle-aged looking woman who identified herself as the manager. She accused US of having mistreated her staff to the degree that our original server had cried! What? In a foolish bout of self-righteous privilege, Miz Ann budded into what we used to call an "A" and "B" conversation, prompting me to prepared myself for whatever was coming next as she was asked to "C" her way out of it. When asked our original server, the alleged "crier" if she was alright, baffled, she responded, "Do I look like I have been crying?" Well, no, she didn't.

BTW: I asked CoPilot for protocol for serving diners in tight places. Here's the response: Serve from the Side or Front When Possible

- Approach from the side of the guest if there's no room behind.'
- · If side access is blocked, serve from the front with a polite acknowledgement "Pardon me, I'll be serving from the front today."
- Avoid reaching across guests: Never reach across a guest to serve another. · A simple "Excuse me" or "May I serve you from here?" maintains respect and clarity
- Staff should be trained to navigate tight spaces without bumping chairs or
- Encourage calm, deliberate movement and a warm demeanor. Didn't happen.

Poor management, weak policies, a lack of professional service protocol, and over-confidence can conspire to create a threatening, confrontational incident for some folks just trying to celebrate a birthday. I'm surprised we didn't end The customer is not always right, and respect should go both ways however, it is not wise to approach any strangers in an aggressive manner. Good management should aim for the illusive win-win outcome. De-escalate the situation, accept responsibility for the possibility of a misunderstanding with the goal being maintenance of a customer and, a pleasant environment for other Customers and staff deserve to be treated with care. But care doesn't mean coddling. It means clear communication, fair policies, and a willingness to lis-

Oh, and a basic understanding that you may not be the craziest person in the room. Mother used to say, "Err on the side of caution." Good advice then

Bottom line: customers should be kind. Employees should be trained. And businesses should set the tone - not just with slogans, but with real support. Because when service works well, it's not just a transaction. It's a moment of connection. Let's bring back the basics: kindness, patience, and a little bit of grace. Because in a world that's changing fast, those old-school values still

William Peace University Receives Record $5 Million Gift

By Jheri Hardaway

Budget Negotiations Harder, Trump Has The Power To Cut Spending Through 'Rescission'

The Conversation—Typically, you would get an actual passage of a full budget for a year. But in the last 20 or 30 years or so, since we've become a more polarized country with a polarized Congress, we have a lot of what are called continuing resolutions, or CRs. They're stopgap measures - not the full budget - and don't tend to make a lot of changes on a lot of the spending priorities that Congress has.

Continuing resolutions usually just extend current levels of spending for a short time so that the two parties can continue negotiating. But as negotiations over long-term budgets have tended to fail more and more, these CR's are becoming more common, and Congress almost never passes a full budget on a yearly basis

The president has the power to veto any piece of legislation, and that includes the federal budget. Essentially, what majorities in Congress

Davis Real Estate Services

Raleigh, NC

budget fight is either the president's implicit sign-off on whatever they pass, or they need enough votes to override the president's veto.

Congress and the presidency right

The Market Is Shifting To Favor Homebuyers Finally

Looking to buy a new house this fall? You're in luck.

A new analysis from home listings website Realtor.com finds that the week of Sept. 25 to Oct. 1 is the best time to purchase. That's thanks to an ideal combination of housing market conditions that give buyers the upper hand, including lower prices, more inventory, reduced competition and more time to make decisions.

Realtor.com estimates that the last week in September could see nearly 50% more active listings compared to the average for the rest of 2022. The company also expects that people who buy that week will save more than $20,000 on a median-priced home compared to those who bought during the peak of the market this summer, when a median-priced home cost In addition, potential buyers can look forward to demand that's generally about 8.5% lower than an average week as well as homes that stay on the market about a week longer than is typical. More price cuts than usual are on Realtor.com's experts attribute these changes in the market to seasonal factors. Not only do kids return to school in the fall, but the weather also cools off, making showings and inspections harder to conduct. (Plus, the cold reduces curb appeal.) As a result, demand drops.

High mortgage rates make it more expensive to buy

Of course, it's only a good time to buy a home if you can afford to do so. Many families are facing affordability challenges thanks to rising mortgage rates, and the issue is only likely to get worse if the Federal Reserve continues to push rates higher — something that many experts agree is likely next week as the central banking system keeps trying to bring down inflation.

"The housing market always cools down this time of year, but this year, I expect fall and winter to be especially frigid as sales dry up more than usual," Daryl Fairweather, chief economist at real estate brokerage Redfin, said in a blog post last week.

If your budget has some wiggle room and you can stomach borrowing at higher rates, though, this could be an opportunity to jump into the market.

Two different things are at work here. One is that Congress, as I mentioned, is really polarized. The two parties are farther apart from each other than they used to be. So the average Democrat and the average Republican aren't going to agree as much on policy priorities and funding priorities than they did, say, in the 1980s or 1970s or before that.

The other thing is that Congress in recent decades has been more closely divided than they have been in the recent past, say, the last century. In both chambers, House and Senate, it's very rare for one party or the other to have some massive majority. You need a majority of 60 in the Senate to have a chance at passing most legislation, for example, and this big a majority hasn't happened since 2009. That's something President Obama enjoyed with the Democrats for just a short period of time.

Since then, there have been very closely divided chambers in Conlicans voted with the Democrats. So for some of these more deficit-hawk Republicans, that concern is still playing a role. What's new this time around is this element of rescissions. This is a tool that's been available since the need to find out a way to get that into the Senate.

1970s in which presidents ask Congress to rescind spending that they had allocated. This is what happened earner this year with the rescissions on public broadcasting - NPR and PBS - that got a lot of attention, as well as on USAID. Trump said he wanted to cut funding for public broadcasting – the GOP in the Senate and House voted to let him. They didn't need 60 votes in the Senate for a rescission, either. Just a majority for this move.

So in this case, Democrats are looking at this and thinking, "Why should we negotiate, if you're just going to rescind that later on without our consent?" That's a major element that's changed. While it's a power that has been in place for a while, Trump and the Republicans have been really willing to wield that.

This is a pretty serious breach of what we call Congress' "power of the purse." That spending power is set out in Article 1 of the Constitution. It is a key power, maybe their most important power and point of leverage they have in going back and forth with the president and making sure the executive branch doesn't accrue too much power.

Small Manufacturers In '26

In support of the Trump Administration's broader effort to rebuild American industrial dominance, the U.S. Small Business Administration (SBA) announced that it would waive most upfront fees for small manufacturers in fiscal year 2026. With the fee burden reduced, the SBA will empower more small manufacturers (NAICS 31-33) with the capital to increase hiring, growth, and production – and to reshore jobs, supply loan fees, the SBA is eliminating barriers to capital so they can invest those dollars back into the mission of rebuilding America's industrial base," said SBA Administrator Kelly Loeffler. "We are proud to advance President Trump's agenda to restore Made in America manufacturing by delivering the capital to help job creators expand production and train and hire more U.S. workers. With lower fees and new loan programs that support access to working capital, we are helping small businesses lead America's industrial comeback - reducing our reliance on foreign suppliers, strengthening our supply chains, and investing in a future that is proudly American Made."

0%. For all 504 manufacturing loans, the upfront fee and annual service fee will each be 0%. These new fee structures will be effective from October 1, 2025 through September 30, 2026.

Small manufacturers can visit the SBA Lender Match portal to be paired with participating SBA Lenders who can provide 7(a) and 504 funding at competitive rates. Manufacturers are also encouraged to utilize SBA's new Manufacturers' Access to Revolving Credit (MARC) Loan Program, which is the agency's first-ever loan program dedicated to America's small manufacturers.

SBA Waives Loan Fees For chains, and national security. "98% of U.S. manufactures are small businesses - and by reducing

For 7(a) manufacturing loans of up to $950,000, the upfront fee will be

In her own words, Britt summed up her motivation to give back: "I have worked hard and been very fortunate in my life. That good fortune gives me the ability to help others, particularly those promising young people who need

RALEIGH, NC - William Peace University (WPU) announced last week it has received the largest single gift in the institution's history: a $5 million donation from the estate of alumna Mrs. Peggy (Garner) Britt, class of 1956. The historic gift is designated entirely for scholarships, fulfilling Britt's explicit goal of giving students who might not otherwise be able to attend college the opportunity to do so. Britt, a Raleigh native who passed away in 2024, was a long-time generous supporter of her alma mater. This bequest expands on her previous donations, including a $1 million gift in 2022, which established the Peggy Britt Scholarship and the Peggy Britt Endowed Scholarship. President Lynn Morton said the gift is a monumental investment in the university's mission. "This historic and generous gift is a transformative investment in our students and in the future of Peace," said Morton. "It reaffirms our deep commitment to access and affordability, ensuring that talented students from all backgrounds can pursue their dreams without financial barriers. We are profoundly grateful for this extraordinary bequest – it will change lives for generations to come.'

Peggy Garner Britt's generosity was rooted in her own life story. Born in Raleigh on September 5, 1936, she graduated from Broughton High School in 1954 and became the first person in her immediate family to attend college. She graduated from Peace College in 1956 with a degree in business. In a 2022 interview, Britt reflected on how her time at Peace shaped her. "When I enrolled at Peace, I was very quiet and shy," she said. "Peace helped me grow academically and socially so that when I entered the workforce after graduation, I was confident about my ability to do my job.'

That confidence propelled her to extraordinary success. In 1957, she married Bill Britt, and together they built one of the largest Amway businesses in the world, achieving the rare Founders Crown Ambassador level. She worked tirelessly to motivate others to "dream big" and was instrumental in forming numerous other businesses. Her success enabled her deep commitment to philanthropy, which included supporting St. Jude Children's Hospital, Samaritan's Purse, and establishing the Bill and Peggy Britt Foundation Inc. to continue her philosophy of "people helping people.

Britt's gift was driven by a desire to give promising students the same chance she had. "I believe that most young people want to improve themselves and have a meaningful and rewarding life," Britt said in her 2022 interview. "Unfortunately, many promising young people and their families lack the financial resources to attend college. I want to help deserving students have that University leadership emphasized that Britt's legacy will do exactly that.

"This remarkable gift – the largest scholarship commitment in Peace's history - reflects not only the incredible generosity of one of our most distinguished alumni, but also her deep belief in the power of education," said Paul Scherschel, Vice President for Advancement. "Her legacy will open doors for countless students and inspire others to invest in the promise of future generations."

a little assistance to get started on their own roads to success.

TIRED OF PAYING HIGH RENT? CONTACT US TODAY! DENNIS DAVIS, OWNER (BIC) SHANI SMITH, REALTOR YOUR HOME IS OUR

0 Businesses Receive State Grants To Accel. Innovation

a well-known gap that many innovative companies face, today the North Carolina Board of Science, Technology & Innovation announced its latest round of funding to small businesses developing and commercializing new technologies in North Carolina. In fiscal year 2024-2025, 90 small businesses in 21 counties received 102 awards from the One North Carolina Small Business Program, providing $4.12 million for innovation in a variety of industries, including pharmaceuticals, energy, advanced materials, and agriculture.

"North Carolina is home to thriving, high-demand sectors, including life sciences and advanced manufacturing, that propel our economy forward," said Governor Josh Stein. "By supporting small businesses at a critical stage of their growth, these grants help drive job creation and economic prosperity.

Business Program awards statefunded grants for small businesses that apply for awards from two highly competitive federal initiatives: the Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) and Small Business Technology Transfer (STTR) programs. The federal SBIR and STTR programs, collectively referred to as America's Seed Fund™, are administered through 11 federal agencies to support technology development by small businesses, with the goal of commercialization and economic sustainability for the selected companies. SBIR and STTR are the single largest source of early-stage technology development funding for small businesses across the country, with nearly $4.3 billion awarded annually.

Since 2006, the One North Carolina Small Business Program has leveraged these federal awards to support North Carolina's innovation ecosystem and help small

The One North Carolina Small businesses navigate the early stages of company growth. By providing this additional capital, the One North Carolina Small Business Program can improve the trajectory of small businesses and the likelihood of commercializing their innovative

> The One North Carolina Small Business Program awarded two types of grants during the fiscal year 2025 funding round: Incentive and Matching. aIncentive grants support qualified North Carolina businesses as they prepare and submit an SBIR or STTR proposal to federal agencies, helping to offset some of the costs of developing these complex proposals. The state program aims to improve the quality of proposals, particularly from first-time applicants, and incentivizes broader technology and geographic diversity among North Carolina's SBIR and STTR applicants. In North Carolina fiscal year 2025, 51 small businesses were awarded Incentive grants totaling $418,863.

winning a Phase I SBIR or STTR federal award, the Matching Program supplements those federal funds. This supplemental funding helps the company navigate what's often called the "Valley of Death" - the time from the launch of a business idea to the point that idea generates sustainable revenue. Additionally, the Matching Program helps attract small businesses to North Carolina, create jobs, and draw more investment to the state. In the most recent round of grantmaking, 51 small businesses in 14 North Carolina counties were awarded $3.69 million in Matching grants after receiving $14.2 million in federal funds.

Among the 51 companies awarded Matching grants, 10 are located in more economically distressed Tier 1 or Tier 2 counties. The N.C. Department of Commerce uses the Tier ranking system to designate the economic well-being in each county through a county's unemadjusted property tax per capita. Tier 1 represents the 40 most distressed counties, the next 40 counties make up Tier 2, and the 20 least distressed form Tier 3. By using this Tier ranking system, state programs can focus on economically advancing the lower Tier counties, in this instance through growth of small innovative businesses. Out of the 10 total awards in Tier 1 and Tier 2, three of the awards went to companies in Tier 1 counties – the most to be awarded through the Matching program in a single year.

The One North Carolina Small Business Program is administered by the North Carolina Department of Commerce on behalf of the North Carolina Board of Science, Technology & Innovation.

"At a time when other states and nations are increasing their investments in scientific discovery and technological advancement, we need twice the state average.

Residential and Commercial Lawn Care

income, population growth, and our greatest challenges, grow our economy, and boost our competitiveness," said Sheila Mikhail, Chair of the Board. "By awarding grants to small businesses across the state, we are investing in our greatest natural resource - our innovative human capital - to drive economic vitality and North Carolina's leadership in the global economy.

Since 2006, the One North Carolina Small Business program has awarded a total of nearly $41 million to 510 businesses across the state. With the support of this early-stage capital, the small, innovative businesses have gone on to maintain more than 2,000 jobs and receive more than $9.6 billion in follow-on funding from other sources to support the innovation economy within North Carolina. Combined, the businesses employ more than 4,000 people, pay $600 million in total wages, and pay peremployee average wages that are

919-346-3337

yonscapes@gmail.com

www.yonscapes.com

Support Small & Local Businesses

Replace your job and earn money at home!

Login at www.jointonyallen.com or call (919) 252-3147 for details to get started.

Lea Funeral Home 2500 Poole Road

Raleigh, NC 27610 (919) 231-1000

"Professional Service With Personal Care"

Call or Visit Us. We also offer Cremation Services & Pre-need Arrangements. You can reserve Our State-of-the-Art Banquet Facilities for your next event

Patrick Yon, Owner

Mobile 984-268-0457

Wiring North Carolina One Box At A Time

Website: HTTPS://Box-Electric.com

Accident & Injury Law

THE BECTON LAW GROUP, PLLC

Automobile Accidents • Truck & Motorcycle Accidents Wrongful Death • Slip and Falls

919.856.0414 www.bectonlaw.com

Your Loved One Deserves The Very Best

NO NO PROBLEM

CRAIG & DALE SMITH

919-698-7739

Services We Offer: Affordable Direct Burial Special on Direct Cremation INSURANCE, Affordable Graveside Service Special on Funeral Service Special on Memorial Service Ship-In, Ship-Out & More

> WE OFFER SPECIAL PRICING ON CREMATIONS AND FUNERALS

DIRECT CREMATION STARTING AT $875.00

ASK FOR CRAIG SMITH (FUNERAL DIRECTOR)

Mailing Address: P.O. Box # 26572 Raleigh, NC 27611 Serving: Wake, Johnston, Harnett, & Durham Counties

1516 New Bern Ave 5416 Rock Quarry Rd Raleigh, NC 27610 Raleigh, NC 27610 919-755-1551 919-329-8125

any take-out or dinein combo order. Must present coupon at time of purchase.

offer exp 9/30/2025

Health and Wellness

HealthySteps Pediatric Clinics, Looks To Expand In NC

By Jennifer Fernandez

NC Health News

Jamestown resident Ashley Robinson's third child arrived three months early. A micro-preemie, Milo weighed just 1 pound, 2.7 ounces, smaller than an average woman's shoe.

At 3 weeks old, he had his first surgery. Since then, he's had at least seven others, including for repairs to his intestines and for glaucoma, a condition where the optic nerve is damaged, usually by pressure in the

Like many babies born early, Milo's lungs were underdeveloped, which left him with chronic lung disease. The umbilical cord did not provide enough nutrients to Milo as he was growing, leading to his premature birth by cesarean section, Robinson said.

Milo was born at Moses Cone transferred him at 3 weeks old to Duke Hospital for his first surgery. He stayed in the neonatal intensive care unit there for eight months.

Robinson, who had been teaching science at Andrews High School in High Point for two years, had to quit to take care of Milo.

That meant her family went from being a two-income household to a one-income household with three children, one of them with medically complex care. The financial toll left Robinson and her husband, Donte, struggling to feed their family.

Little did she know that help was more at risk of health issues throughout waiting for her at Milo's first visit with their lives. Typically, these families are the family's longtime pediatrician. served by Medicaid, the State Chil-When she took Milo to Atrium Health Wake Forest Baptist Pediatrics-Greensboro, the doctor recommended Robinson speak to the practice's HealthySteps specialist.

Fourteen pediatric offices in Guilford County have embedded these specialists, who are trained to offer support for problems and concerns — common and complex — that parents might have that doctors don't have time to address at regular patient visits.

The HealthySteps specialists provide parenting guidance, support between visits, help with referrals and care coordination. They can talk to parents about issues like behavior, sleep and parental depression, as well as social determinants of health such as access to food or transportation that could be affecting

For Robinson, the HealthySteps spe-Hospital in Greensboro, but doctors cialist provided an opening she didn't realize she needed.

"There was just something about her that when she asked if I was OK ... I felt like I could be honest with her and tell her ... I'm not OK," Robinson recalled. "I'm doing the best I can, but I am struggling to keep my head above water

Early focus

HealthySteps is a program of the nonprofit Zero to Three, which advocates for evidence-based interventions for infants and toddlers.

HealthySteps focuses on serving children in low-income families who are dren's Health Insurance Program or are uninsured. However, all children age 3 and younger in participating clinics receive HealthySteps services.

Children receive a series of developmental, socioemotional and behavioral screenings. In addition, the HealthySteps specialists regularly check in with families for other risk factors — from maternal depression and domestic violence, to food insecurity and homelessness.

Nationally, the program has reached more than 496,000 children this year in 334 sites across 25 states, Washington, D.C., and Germany, according to the nonprofit.

In North Carolina, just over 33,000 children are in HealthySteps pediatric care, said Natalie Tackitt, the program's state coordinator. More than 25,000 of them are in Guilford County, she said.

There are two sites in Durham and one at Fort Bragg in Fayetteville. The majority, however, are in Guilford County where the Children's Home Society started the program in 2018 with six HealthySteps specialists, according to Brianna White, HealthySteps program supervisor.

The Children's Home Society was HealthySteps sites in North Carolina

With HealthySteps, children receive a series of developmental, socioemotional and behavioral screenings during pediatric well-check visits. In addition, the HealthySteps specialists regularly check in with families for other risk factors — from maternal depression and domestic violence handful of clinics but wanted to have a bigger impact, in part by wrapping a suite of support services around the child, White said.

Map: Jennifer Fernandez/NC Health News - Source: HealthySteps - Get the data - Created with Datawrap

The way Tackitt describes the wraparound concept is that no baby lives by themselves, and an unwell parent is not going to be able to support the healthy development of a child.

She described HealthySteps as "promoting healthy behaviors to prevent unhealthy outcomes."

HealthySteps has a three-tiered ap-already doing parent education in a proach to services. All children 3 years old or younger, and their families, get screened. The HealthySteps specialists check a child's ongoing progress on reaching developmental milestones. They help connect families to services. They answer questions families have about child development and well-

> More intensive services are available for children who need additional help, from behavioral health consults to early learning resources to ongoing, preventive team-based well-child vis-

Referrals and follow ups are a key component to ensure that children and families are getting the help they

One reason HealthySteps focuses on the period from birth to age 3 is that young children go to their pediatricians for well-checks a lot during this period, Tackitt said. They usually make seven visits in the first year alone.

Those first few years are also key to a child's development, from learning motor skills to acquiring language to setting up good mental health. The brain is growing rapidly, creating nearly a million neural connections per second, absorbing information like

The idea is that HealthySteps "becomes almost a one-stop shop for families where they're being asked about their social, emotional, mental health, as well as being asked about their medical health," Melissa Baron, director of quality for HealthySteps' national office, said earlier this year at a conference on early childhood at the UNC Frank Porter Graham Child Development Institute.

'A friendly face'

(See HEALTHYSTEPS, PED., P. 7)

Product Review: Power Peace Pads

By Jheri Hardaway

This year at Earn Your Leisure's InvestFest, one of the vendors that stood out the most had a product that most of the population needs but is not widely produced. It stops girls from going to school and can impact women from working. You can only use it once, but it is relied upon. I'm talking about sanitary napkins or pads. Rizza Islam's Intellectual Power Peace Pads are dedicated to providing women with safe, comfortable, and reliable sanitary products. Their mission is to empower women by ensuring their personal care needs are met with the utmost respect and quality. The team at Intellectual Peace Pads believes that every woman deserves the peace of mind that comes with knowing her needs are taken care of with products designed for her well-being.

After utilizing this product for several months, I have found that Peace Pads is a top-of-the-line product that rivals all the major options in drug stores today. The various sizes are helpful for different points in the cycle and are well packaged. The labeling is beautifully packaged with encouraging words of af-

Via their website, "At Peace, our vision is to revolutionize the way women experience their menstrual cycle. We believe in providing a product that not only offers superior comfort and protection but also promotes a sense of tranquility and well-being during a time that can be stressful for many. Our commitment to quality and sustainability ensures that every sanitary napkin we produce is not only kind to your skin but also to the environment. At Peace, our commitment to providing high-quality sanitary napkins is unwavering. We understand the importance of reliable, comfortable, and safe menstrual care products. Our dedication to your well-being is at the heart of everything

At $35 plus shipping for the Peace Pack, this Black Owned product is definitely worth a try. Purchasing a Peace Pack for the ladies in your life would be an outstanding way to show them you understand and that you care. Congratulations to Rizza Islam and his team for a thoughtful and impactful product.

BLACK YOUTH SUICIDE

Continued from page 1

Black Youth Wellness Advisory Board, during a panel discussion.

Judith Beth VanBoven, who also serves on the state's youth advisory board, told the audience that sharing their experiences can help others. "Your testimony will become a legacy that someone else will learn from," she said.

Rafiah Maxi Cole, founder of Sole Survivors of Chicago, also took part in the

She spoke with NC Newsline ahead of the conference, sharing her own story of loss. In 2020, her 19-year-old son died by suicide. "I wanted to be vocal about learning more about what happened," she said.

Maxi Cole has since dedicated her life to prevention efforts, producing the documentary "While the Children Fade" and leading community outreach in nontraditional spaces — from laundromats to bus stops. "We must meet the community where the community is," she said. "Street outreach is the best outreach." She praised North Carolina's action plan as an important step in reducing the stigma around mental health struggles. "To recognize that Black youth are surpassing any other ethnicity when it comes to suicide ideations and attempts brings about an awareness," she said in earlier interview. "It's time to human-

Throughout the day, speakers framed suicide prevention as a collective responsibility. Brandon Johnson, who leads a national Black youth suicide prevention initiative, said in his speech that "this is an act of love, an act of hope, an act of resilience. We care deeply about each and every one of you."

Community members also shared stories of local resilience. Corey Kent, a barber student at Edgecombe Community College, described how his decision to pursue barbering became a form of service. On Saturday, he was offering free haircuts both as a way to hone his skills and connect with neighbors. "Write your dreams out. Don't ever stop chasing them," Kent said.

Organizers said that the initiative's success depends on grassroots involvement. Efforts include training barbers and other community members to recognize warning signs of depression, as well as providing culturally responsive

Despite political uncertainty surrounding diversity initiatives, organizers said the community-led approach makes their work resilient. "When the community and the village embrace the work, it can't be stopped," said Dr. Sonyia Richardson, a UNC Chapel Hill researcher who helped developed the state

The plan will focus on the 17 counties with the highest suicide rates, while maintaining a commitment to reach all 100 counties in North Carolina.

For Crosbie, the stakes could not be higher. "Suicide is now one of the leading causes of death among youth," she said. "But prevention is possible when we build safe spaces and strong networks of support.'

Buy an apple bag for your family and reco fill COCOCOCO family's table

*From September 17 - October 7, 2025, Food Lion will donate 50¢ (monetary equivalent of 5 meals) from each bag purchased, up to $200,000, to The Food Lion Feeds Charitable Foundation to provide grants to local feeding partners within Food Lion's 10-state footprint. Monetary donations made at checkout in-store or online will also be donated to The Food Lion Feeds Charitable Foundation.

foodlion.com/feeds

Arts & Culture

The Overlooked Role Of Black Women In Early Cinema

By Jordan Meadows

Staff Writer

On last Thursday evening, the Wake County Public Library hosted a thought-provoking presentation that honored the complex journeys of early African American actresses in Holly-

The presentation was delivered by Dr. Charlene Regester, a renowned scholar and associate professor in the Department of African, African American, and Diaspora Studies at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. With decades of research devoted to Black visibility in early film, Dr. Regester illuminated the ways in which Black women on screen struggled against-and sometimes strategically subverted—the racialized roles they

Dr. Regester, who also serves as interim director of UNC's Institute for African American Research, has long been a fixture in the world of Black film scholarship. She was among the first students to use the Walter Royal Davis Library at UNC Chapel Hill when it opened in 1984, where she reviewed over 30,000 articles from Black newspapers on microfilm.

This work formed the backbone of several of her publications, including African American Actresses: The Struggle for Visibility, 1900–1960, a critically acclaimed book that was an's laundry, terrifying the family—an

nominated for an NAACP Image

Dr. Regester traced what she described as the transition of Black women in film "from aprons and pinafores to jeweled crowns and rhinestone gowns.'

Among the earliest actresses discussed was Bertha Regustus, a largely forgotten but important figure who appeared in silent films as early as 1903, including What Happened in the Tunnel. In these early roles, Black characters were often used for comic relief and were portrayed through grotesque stereotypes—sometimes even by white actors in blackface.

Madame Sul-Te-Wan, born Nellie Crawford, became the first Black woman to sign a film contract, appearing in the controversial film The Birth of a Nation (1915). Despite the groundbreaking nature of her contract, the film's portrayal of African Americans-villainous, caricatured, and servile-exemplified the toxic narratives that early Black performers were forced to navigate.

Dr. Regester critically examined how such portrayals were crafted for white audiences' amusement and how fear and ridicule were often central to the cinematic depiction of Black people. In the 1920 silent short Neighbors, for instance, a white criminal hides under a sheet in a Black womunsettling nod to the Ku Klux Klan cal positioning." that used Black terror as the punch-

"Not only did these pictures challenge Black stereotypes, they also depicted white characters who performed the Black stereotype, in reverse roles with Blacks, for the purpose of providing comic relief," Dr. Regester said.

The presentation also focused on more widely recognized actresses, like Hattie McDaniel, who became the first African American to win an Academy Award for her portrayal of Mammy in Gone with the Wind (1939). While some civil rights leaders, including NAACP's Walter White, criticized the role for reinforcing subservient stereotypes, Dr. Regester highlighted how McDaniel brought depth and subtle resistance to the character.

Through commanding voice, posture, and presence, McDaniel transformed Mammy into a figure of moral authority-becoming the emotional and ethical "center" of the film. McDaniel's own pragmatism was reflected in her famous quote: "I'd rather play a maid making $7000 a week than $7 a week being one.'

"She took the role and turned it into something more. I think we need to acknowledge her talent and ability to do that," Regester said. "Mammy attempts to locate a space for herself while articulating her voice and physi-

Also under consideration for the Mammy role was Elizabeth McDuffie, the White House cook, who was recommended by none other than First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt. Ultimately, McDaniel secured the part, though Louise Beavers-another prominent Black actress-was also in the running. Meanwhile, Butterfly McQueen, best known for her portrayal of Prissy in the same film, embodied a different kind of emotional labor than McDan-

In a critical birth scene, McOueen's character breaks down in panic, shifting the emotional burden from Scarlett O'Hara, the white female lead, to the Black supporting character.

The Black characters bear the emotional burden of the film. So, it is Prissy, when she acts out and expresses her real fear in helping to deliver a child, this is really probably the fear they'd like for Scarlett to have, but they don't want to tarnish this image of a Southern belle," Regester said. "They displace it onto the Black character. So, though the Black character is a stereotype, she serves other purposes."

Dr. Regester also highlighted trailblazers who operated outside the typical Hollywood framework, such as Hazel Scott, a Trinidadian-American musical prodigy, who became the first York with Black immigrants who had Black woman to host her own U.S. migrated there and African Ameri- society—designed to erase them.

BERTHA REGUSTUS

television show in 1950.

Known for her refusal to play segregated venues, Scott was a fearless advocate for civil rights and artistic integrity. Scott placed anti-discrimination clauses in her contracts and dazzled audiences by playing two pianos simultaneously—a feat later honored by Alicia Keys at the Grammy Awards in 2019. Scott's political outspokenness ultimately led to her being blacklisted during the McCarthy era, cutting short her television career.

Her marriage to Adam Clayton Powell Jr., an American Baptist pastor and the first African American to be elected to Congress from New York, was believed to have "elevated Scott's political involvement" while helping to narrow the divide that existed in New cans", Regester said.

Another icon, Lena Horne, made history by signing a seven-year contract with MGM in 1942-the first Black woman to do so in over 25 years. During World War II, Horne famously refused to perform for the segregated U.S. Army audiences, choosing instead to sing directly to Black soldiers relegated to the back-while white German POWs sat in front. Her signature performance of Stormy Weather (1943) became a civil rights

The presentation also spotlighted Alice Burton Russell, a North Carolina native born in Maxton, whose father was a newspaper editor. Russell worked alongside her husband, pioneering filmmaker Oscar Micheaux, acting in many of his race films-movies made by and for Black audiences. Their last film was made in Charlotte in 1959. Through her performances, Russell represented the Black bourgeois class—dignified, educated, and central to the narrative, unlike the stereotypical roles available in mainstream Hollywood.

Throughout the evening, Dr. Regester made a compelling case that these women were not mere victims of stereotyping but agents of cultural transformation. They used their limited roles to assert humanity, dignity, and resistance in an industry-and

Afro-Bolivians Fight Invisibility Through Dance And Memory

YUNGAS, Bolivia (AP) - Cielo Torres had always lived in Bolivia. Yet before moving at age 17 to the remote town of Tocaña — where much of the country's Afro-descendant community lives - she had rarely encountered people who looked like

"Back in Santa Cruz, we were the only Afro," said Torres, now 25. "But when I saw others like me, I told myself: This is where I want to be. Here I feel comfortable and understood.'

Her sense of belonging echoes the experience of many Afro-Bolivians. Although officially recognized in the constitution since 2009, they remain one of Bolivia's least visible groups, struggling to feel at home in their

"Many think that we are foreigners and we don't have any rights," said Carmen Angola, executive director of the Afro-Bolivian National Council (CONAFRO). "But we were born

More than 11.3 million people live in Bolivia. Around 23,000 identified as Afro in a 2012 census, the first and only time they appeared as a distinct category. Most live in Yungas, a region where roads and communications are scarce but coca leaf planta-

"Our Afro communities depend on coca harvesting or honey production," said Torres, who runs a beekeeping business with her husband. "We are people used to walking trails instead of paved roads," she added.

"People who learn from the land." Symbolic gestures, scarce change

Official information on the community's history is hard to come by. "We have been made invisible by the state," said activist Mónica Rey. it turns out we celebrate among our-"There weren't any written registers reflecting our reality. We wrote that history down ourselves.' She said some progress was made in 2007, a year after Evo Morales became Bolivia's first Indigenous president. "By 2009 we were included in the constitution," she added. "But we have demanded our inclusion and rights to all the past governments. Morales supported CONAFRO's founding in 2011. That same year, Sept. 23 was established as the National Day of the Afro-Bolivian People and Culture. Still, according to Rey, symbolic recognition is not enough to achieve structural change. "The idea was that this day would serve to reaffirm our identity and that the state would create public policies for the Afro people," Rey said. "But selves and the government doesn't do anything.

(AP PHOTO/JUAN KARITA)

She and Carmen Angola contend that promoting their people's legacy has proven difficult. Angola has tried to convince local authorities to allow a group of Afro-Bolivians to visit schools and share insights of their community. None have agreed so far.

rney just say they re going to audress discrimination, history and racism," Angola said. "But the people who created the curricula aren't Black. Their history is not ours."

From the mines to the 'haciendas' CONAFRO joined efforts with another organization to gather testimonies documenting the Afro-Bolivian community's long-lost past. A comprehensive document was released in

"We got our history back," Rey said. "Our experiences, our elders' tales, our culture, have been retrieved and documented.'

The Afro-Bolivian people descend from the Africans enslaved in the Americas during the European conquest between the 16th and 17th cen-

Mostly born in Congo and Angola, they were initially taken to Potosí, a colonial mining city located about 340 miles (550 kilometers) southeast of La Paz.

The high altitude - 13,700 feet (4,175 meters) above sea level — and the extreme weather quickly took a toll. Later on, exposure to mercury and other substances in mining led to severe illnesses — from tooth loss, respiratory disease and death.

Two centuries later, the ancestors of the current Afro-Bolivian population were forcibly relocated to Yungas. There they settled and started working in large estates known as 'haciendas,' where coca leaf, coffee and sugar cane were grown.

"The Afro people were dying and that was inconvenient because they were considered investments," said sociologist Óscar Mattaz. "So people started buying them and taking them

Now Tocaña and neighboring towns are considered the cultural heart of Afro-Bolivians.

A king with no crown

In Mururata lives Julio Pinedo, a symbolic leader regarded as the king of the Afro-Bolivians.

Bolivia's Black community has recognized kings for centuries. Pinedo's role carries no political weight within the government, but he is considered cal authorities acknowledge his title and even attended his coronation in "The king was a symbolic means a guardian of his people's rights. Lo-to show there's royalty in the community," Mattaz said. "He was very influential, worked hard and was respected." His position hardly made a difference in his lifestyle. Pinedo, now 83, resides in the same humble home he has always lived. He now relies on his son's coca harvest for income. Pinedo welcomes visitors. But engaging in conversation is hard due to his age. According to his wife, Angélica Larrea, his royal ancestry dates back 500 years. "I remember his coronation," she said. "People came from other communities. They danced and there was a procession. A priest came and we celebrated Mass. A handful of Afro-Bolivians have tried to decipher what their ancestors' spirituality was. Yet the community remains overwhelmingly Catholic. Close to Pinedo's home, the sole parish of Mururata has no resident priest. Nonetheless, a group of devoted women are welcomed to read the Bible each Sunday. Isabel Rey – a distant relative of Mónica – said her ancestors were Catholics. And even without a priest to rely on, the catechist in charge of the church has kept the community's faith strong. "She will soon celebrate 40 years sharing the Lord's word," Rey said. "I help her, because she can't keep up the work alone." A dance of struggle and love

There might not be an Afro-Bolivian spirituality, but the community's soul remains bonded through the saya," a traditional dance performed with drums and chants.

"Our demands were born through this music," Rey said. "The saya has become our instrument to gain visibility. We protest with drums and Torres recalled dancing saya before moving to Tocaña. Yet her feelings while performing it changed.

"Here it's danced from the heart," she said. "I learned how to sing and listen. It's no ordinary music because we tell our history through it."

She said each detail in their garments bears meaning. The white symbolizes peace and the red honors the blood shed by their ancestors. Men wear black hats to remember how their predecessors worked endlessly under the sun. And the women's braids depict the roads they dreamed of to escape.

"It may seem like fashion, but it's not," Torres said. "It's our culture." For more than a decade now, she has learned new moves and saya songs. She became fluent in her community's language — a variation of Spanish that is not officially recognized — and is proud of ner identity.

"I used to feel embarrassed for dancing saya," Torres said. "But when I saw people dancing here, I told myself: 'This is what I am. I am Black."

Committed to raising her daughter to also be proud of her ancestry, she constantly praises her skin color, hair and moves.

'She already dances saya," Torres said. "I tell her: 'You are Black. My Black little girl."

Muslim Storytelling Aims to Change Harmful TV Stereotypes

By Tazeen M. Ali

The Conversation

For over a century, Hollywood has tended to portray Muslim men through a remarkably narrow lens: as terrorists, villains or dangerous outsiders. From shows such as "24" and "Homeland" to procedural dramas such as "Law and Order," this portrayal has seldom allowed for complexity or relatability.

Such depictions reinforce Orientalist stereotypes – a colonial worldview that treats cultures in the East as exotic, irrational or even dangerous. However, recent years have seen a noticeable increase in Muslim-led storytelling across platforms in the U.S. and U.K. While still a minority, these stories depart from decades of misrepresentation. As a scholar of Islam and gender who has conducted research on masculinity, sexuality and national belonging in Muslim entertainment media, I analyze a new wave of critically acclaimed shows where Muslim characters are at the center of the Historical stereotypes

Scholar of media and race Jack Shaheen has documented the systematic vilification of Arabs and Muslims in Western media. In his 2001 book "Reel Bad Arabs," he analyzed over a thousand films and found that the vast majority depicted Arab and Muslim men almost exclusively as fanatics, oil-rich villains and misogynists.

More recently, a 2021 study from the University of Southern California's Annenberg Inclusion Initiative looked at 200 popular movies and found that Muslim characters were either completely missing or shown

Despite the consistency of negative representations of Muslims on television following the rise in Islamophobia, the post-9/11 climate actually saw the introduction of more diverse Muslim characters. Such portrayals promoted the idea of the U.S. as a tolerant, liberal society.

Scholar of popular culture Evelyn Alsultany writes that Hollywood introduced Muslim characters who were often law-abiding citizens or patriotic allies. She explains that despite these positive attempts, these characters were still depicted in simplistic ways, as either "good Muslims" or "bad Muslims." The "good Muslim/bad Muslim" framework was coined by scholar of postcolonialism Mahmood Mamdani to describe how Muslims are understood across this binary. The "good Muslims" distance themselves from their faith and align themselves with Western liberal values to gain acceptance.

Expanding on this theme, Islamic studies scholar Samah Choudhury explains how the mainstream success of South Asian Muslim male comedians such as Hasan Minhaj, Kumail Nanjiani and Aziz Ansari is shaped by their adoption of secular ideals.

Even so-called "positive" characters, such as Muslim FBI agents or loyal informants in shows like "NCIS" or "Homeland," ultimately served to normalize state surveillance and justify the global war on terrorism, a global campaign initiated by the U.S. following the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. These brown and sometimes Black Muslim characters are portrayed as "good" only when aligned with U.S. state power.

Effort in contemporary television

WORKING TITLE TELEVISION

Hulu's comedy drama series 'Ramy" is a milestone in Muslim storytelling. Created by actor-comedian Ramy Youssef, the series, which debuted in 2019, follows a young Egyptian-American Muslim navigating family, faith and relationships in Ramy is devoid of storylines about national security. Instead, the show foregrounds its main character's grappling with religiosity, dating and identity. Moreover, as I have argued elsewhere, the protagonist's religious devotion is never a punchline but a part of his everyday experience.

For instance, Ramy prays five times a day - at the mosque and at home, fasts during Ramadan, and abstains from alcohol as a matter of Islamic observance. At the same time, he also partakes in hookup culture and wrestles with guilt for falling short of Islamic ideals. By showcasing this duality, the show illuminates internal debates within American Muslim communities, including on gendered norms around marriage and sexual ethics.

Across the Atlantic, the BBC comedy series "Man Like Mobeen," created by comedian-actor Guz Khan, offers a layered portrayal of Muslim life in inner-city Birmingham, England. The show follows Mobeen, a reformed British Pakistani gangster, striving and often failing to leave his criminal past behind and live as a devout Muslim while raising his teenage sister.

The show explores the struggles of the working class. It situates Muslim communities within broader class and racial dynamics whereby working-class Black and brown men are vulnerable to racial profiling by law enforcement and gang violence.

With incisive and dark humor, it challenges British racism against Muslims and offers social and political commentary on U.K. society. This includes critiques of British far-right movements and their racism, as well as the failures of the National Health conflict with nuance and humor.

Muslim women on screen

The flip side of stereotypical portrayals of Muslim men as violent and misogynist is the equally reductive portrayal of Muslim women as passive or oppressed. When Muslim women appear on screen, they are often presented as submissive or "liberated" only by a white non-Muslim male romantic interest. This process of liberation usually involves removing their hijab or distancing themselves from Islam. A refreshing departure from such storytelling norms can be found in the British Channel 4 comedy "We Are Lady Parts," created by filmmaker and writer Nida Manzoor, which debuted in 2021.

The show follows an all-female Muslim punk band in London. The bandmates are funny, creative and rebellious. While they defy Western views of Muslim women, they do not appear to be written solely to shatter

They reflect the contradictions that many Muslims live with, juggling faith, identity and politics in their music. The band's songs include feminist themes but are diverse, subverting Islamophobic stereotypes against women with humor with songs like "Voldemort Under My Headscarf," or lusting after a love interest in "Bashir with the good beard."

The band members are also often seen engaged in ritual prayer together, a unified display of worship among women who otherwise have very different personalities, fashion sensibilities and goals in life. The show also addresses queerness, Islamophobia and intergenerational

I explore all of these themes in further detail in my forthcoming book, in which I examine how this new wave of Muslim media offers insights about the lived religious experiences of American and British Muslims.

Narrative authority

What unites these series is their rejection of reductive and stereotypical narratives. Muslim characters in these shows are not defined by violence, trauma or assimilation. Nor do they serve as spokespeople for all Muslims; they are written as flawed and evolving individuals.

This wave of nuanced portrayals of Muslim life includes other recent productions such as Netflix's 2022 series "Mo" and Hulu's 2025 reality series "Muslim Matchmaker," which centers real people whose lives and romantic journeys showcase American Muslim life in authentic ways. Muslims in the show are depicted as having various professions, levels of faith and life experiences.

These series and their creators signal that real progress comes when Muslim voices are telling their own stories, not simply reacting to the gaze of outsiders or the pressures of political headlines. By foregrounding daily ritual, spiritual aspiration and even awkwardness and desire, "Ramy," "Man Like Mobeen" and 'We Are Lady Parts" all refuse the burden of "representation."

By moving away from the binary of "threatening other" versus "assimilated citizen," this new wave of media challenges the legacy of Orientalism. Instead, they offer characters who reflect the complex realities of Muslim lives that are messy, joyful

Community

For the Community, By the Community: A Sheriff's Vision For Harnett County

By Jheri Hardaway

Lillington, NC - Major Aaron Meredith, a 20-year veteran of the sheriff's office, is running for Sheriff of Harnett County with a platform centered on community enhancement and a modern approach to law enforcement. With a history of serving in nearly every capacity within the department, he brings a unique perspective and a deep understanding of the office's operations.

"I've pretty much done everything at the sheriff's office," he said. "What I didn't do, I was overseeing at some point. I feel like I can go into the role knowing things that someone on the outside really needs to.'

Major Meredith's top priority is expanding the department's community programs, a core belief that has guided his career. He emphasizes that the three constitutional duties of the Sheriff-civil service, court security, and detention—are non-negotiable, but what can be built upon is a stronger community presence. "I want to focus on community. I'm big on community," he stated. "It's comes with experience. "I can really what I've done, it's what I've come up with. I think there's a lot more we

One of his key initiatives is nurturing and expanding existing programs, such as the P.A.L. Program, which includes boxing, wrestling, a makerspace with 3D printers, and even robot camps. Major Meredith said the program is a "little tiny plant that just needs to be watered." He wants to see similar programs flourish, including Senior Well-Check and Exercise Programs, Self-Defense Classes, and a Sheriff's Cadet Program to train and mentor future Harnett County law enforcement professionals. The goal is to provide a pipeline for local youth to grow within the department, with the possibility of having their basic law enforcement training paid for.

Major Meredith understands the community's concerns and promises to re-examine all departmental policies, including the controversial topic of high-speed chases. Acknowledging that the current policy is designed to uphold law and order, he recogunderstand... what that means when a life is taken because somebody is running from a traffic stop for an expired registration," he said. "I do plan on re-looking at those things. I plan on looking at all of the policies."

He also plans to focus on complaint-driven narcotics investigations. This approach would prioritize the most pressing issues for residents—a drug dealer living next door, for example-and aim to provide visible, responsive action. While acknowledging the lengthy process of swift action, even if it's as simple as knocking on a door and telling a

He also emphasizes the need to invest in modern technology to ensure the safety of deputies and the public. Tools like drones and a remote-controlled robot with cameras, which can be sent into dangerous situations, are "very, very important pieces of equipment" for keeping ev-

Major Meredith also envisions bringing in therapy dogs for both the community and department personnel. Citing the success of such programs in other counties, he sees them as a vital resource for addressing the trauma experienced by 911 dispatchers and for helping comfort children at the scene of a tragic event. Major Meredith's vision for the Harnett County Sheriff's Office is one of progress and collaboration. He aims to bring his years of experience and a fresh, community-focused perspective to the role, building a department that is not only effective but deeply connected to the people it

Pictured from left to right: Rev. Darlington, Moses High, Dr. Ross, Nurse Darkes, Dr. Darkes, Lloyd Inman, Carolyn Green Boone, little Aiden Green, Barry Parker.

Area Physician Combines Praise And Prostate Cancer Awareness

RALEIGH, NC - September 14th marked the 3rd annual "Prostate Cancer Awareness Sunday" at Christian Faith Baptist Curch in Raleigh, NC. Christian Faith member Doctor Leroy Darkes plays guitar there regularly during worship. But Dr. Darkes is also president of the North Carolina Minority Prostate Cancer Awareness Action Team. In commemoration of September being Prostate Cancer (PC) Awareness Month, the "Action Team" recently joined Christian Faith

The vestibule flourished a sea of "PC blue" on the shirts of Action Team members and a table of brochures, PC blue ribbon pins, screening reminder pens as well as other life-saving information. In the sanctuary ushers presented striking blue prostate cancer church programs. Christian Faith members Lloyd Inman & Dr. Darkes were the genesis of this meaningful tradition. Christian Faith pastor Reverend Keith A. Darlington has graciously welcomed and hosted the annual Multiple online worshippers and those present witnessed Dr. Darkes celebrating his two year PC survival anniversary following an emotional revelation of his diagnosis at the same event back in 2023. The irony of Dr. Darkes' prostate cancer diagnosis was that he's been a long-term soldier in the battle against PC. He's a staunch advocate for comprehensive PC screening and an Action Team Shepherd who guides men with PC though what is often a harrowing ordeal. For many years, Dr. Darkes has been a trusted physician who counsels PC patients and screens for PC as part of his practice. He has administered PSA blood tests and digital rectal exams to countless men...many times on a volunteer basis at free screenings. Dr. Darkes' talk at Christian Faith centered around the disparate rate of PC induced morbidity and mortality for minority men which inspired formation of the Action Team. But he also emphasized how that rate can be lessened with regular screening which increases the possibility of early detection. Dr. Darkes revealed that PC displays no symptoms until later stages and that early detection gives the best chance for a successful outcome.

Reverend Darlington preached an inspiring sermon about the importance of tolerance and inclusivity, as well as humility and service-which he pointed out all require self-sacrifice. He noted the sacrifices made by Action Team members as they selflessly work to increase PC awareness and provide support for those afflicted with the incidious disease.

In attendance were many ladies motivated to gain and share PC information with others- and to encourage loved ones to get screened. Among them was Dr. Darkes' wife, Dee Darkes. Nurse Darkes chairs the recently revived "PC Angels", a branch of the Action Team designed to give information and support to wives, companions and families of PC patients & survivors. Also present was Dr. Louie Ross, chair of the Action Team Support Group which meets online monthly. The Action Team meets at noon on second Fridays at the Zeta-Sigma House in Raleigh and can be reached at 919-438-2673.

Cashless Bail—continued from Page 1

low-level misdemeanor, may remain in jail for days, weeks or months. Defendants by law are presumed innocent, but stuck behind bars, they can lose jobs or housing and be unable to care for their family.

Dozens of jurisdictions, including some states, have taken steps to change their bail systems, but there is no single definition of what constitutes "bail reform" or how such changes are applied.

Some states, counties and cities have moved toward fully or nearly eliminating, cash bail. Under these "cashless bail" systems, people may be released before trial without paying money unless a judge determines they pose a public safety risk or are unlikely to return to court. These decisions, experts say, are made intentionally, based on the facts of the case — including the charges involved - rather than on a defendant's ability to pay.

The policies can affect a large share of the people in the justice system. About 5 million felony cases and 13 million misdemeanor cases are resolved in state courts each year, according to the National Center for State Courts. Since misdemeanors make up the bulk of

Some opponents of cashless bail policies argue that lenient policies may result in the release of defendants who could reoffend or fail to appear. Supporters counter that keeping people in jail simply because they cannot afford bail is unfair and disproportionately affects Black, Latino and low-income defendants.

The ongoing debate has fueled first consider nonfinancial condimisconceptions, partly because some tions, such as check-ins or curfews, claims that cashless bail policies cause upticks in crime.

Trump has frequently drawn that connection himself. In a July post on Truth Social, he wrote: "Crime in American Cities started to significantly rise when they went to CASHLESS BAIL. The WORST criminals are flooding our streets and endangering even our great law enforcement officers. It is a complete disaster, and must be ended, IMME-

Supporters of cash bail often raise concerns that released suspects might commit new, potentially more cases, state and local bail policies serious crimes. While that is possible can shape outcomes for millions of in individual cases, some research suggests that eliminating cash ball does not lead to a widespread in- liberative," said Don Steman, a procrease in crime. Some research also suggests that setting money bail isn't effective in ensuring court appearances or improving public safety.

How the bail system works Washington, D.C., the immediate target of Trump's executive orders, largely eliminated the use of cash bail in 1992. Judges are required to Several states also have adopted major changes. Alaska, California, Illinois, New Jersey and New York have passed laws scaling back or fully eliminating cash bail, though some of those laws have since been revised. New Mexico voters in 2016 also overwhelmingly approved a constitutional amendment to eliminate cash bail.

In 2023, Illinois became the first state to fully abolish cash bail through the Pretrial Fairness Act. which also guarantees defendants legal representation at pretrial hear-

"Those early decisions about someone's liberty are much more defessor and co-director of the Center for Criminal Justice at Loyola University Chicago. The center's team has been evaluating the implementation and impact of the Pretrial Fairness Act. "It's about, 'Is this person a threat to public safety or a threat to willful flight?'

In Houston, a 2019 settlement and consent decree resolved a lawsuit challenging Harris County's misdemeanor bail practices as unconstitutional, requiring the county to release most people charged with misdemeanors on a personal promise to return to court.

In the latest independent monitoring report, from 2024, observers wrote that the changes "have saved Harris County and residents many millions of dollars, improved the lives of tens of thousands of persons," and resulted in "no increase in new offenses by persons arrested for misdemeanors. In August, just a day after Trump issued his executive order, Texas Republican Attorney General Ken Paxcon asked a federal court to vacate the consent decree.

He argued that the order conflicts with a Texas law passed in 2021 and another state bail law that took effect this month. Those laws require people charged with violent crimes in Texas to post cash bail in order to be released from jail, and expand the list of offenses for which defendants must post a cash bond, respectively. Bail policies and crime

Reports of violent crime nationwide have been decreasing since 2022 both in jurisdictions that have adopted cashless bail and in those that have not, though some communities continue to face higher rates of certain offenses, including nomicide

Pretrial crime accounts for only a small share of overall crime. And experts say most crime data is too unreliable to link changes in crime rates to any single policy.

"It's just so difficult to say this policy equals this result when crime is going up and down so dramatically as it has over the last decade," said Jeff Clayton, the executive director of the American Bail Coalition, a bail industry lobbying group.

La Fiesta del Pueblo Celebrates 31 Years of Hispanic Heritage

By Jordan Meadows

Raleigh's streets came alive Sunday afternoon as La Fiesta del Pueblo, the Triangle's largest celebration of Latin American culture, returned for its 31st

Held annually as part of Hispanic Heritage Month, the cultural event transformed six blocks of Fayetteville Street into a vibrant hub of music, food, art, and community connection.

Organized by El Pueblo, a Raleigh-based nonprofit dedicated to leadership development in Wake County's Latinx community, the festival brought together a wide cross-section of people to celebrate the diverse traditions and flavors of Hispanic heritage.

Veronica Aguilar, Communications Director at El Pueblo, described the festival as "a moment to celebrate the pride, the existence, the resistance, and the legacy of the Hispanic community in North Carolina." She emphasized that La Fiesta del Pueblo is "a moment to remember traditions held tightly, whether from home countries or passed down here in the U.S., and to connect again with that heritage.'

As immigration fears have led to the cancellation of similar events—most notably Charlotte's Heritage Festival of the Carolinas-Raleigh's organizers were determined to move forward.

Despite nationwide concerns over immigration crackdowns, the Raleigh event remained strong. Attendees expressed relief and joy that the festival continued as planned.

The crowd—approximately reaching 20,000—sampled cuisine from across Latin America. Food vendors included Tropical Kabob & More by Chef Palau of Greenville, offering authentic Puerto Rican dishes; Poblanos Tacos out of Knightdale with Mexican flavors; and Empanadas RD from Raleigh, serving specialties from the Dominican Republic.

Artisan booths added a creative flair to the event. Vendors such as Crafts by Shirley from Sanford featured handcrafted kitchen items like fabric bowl holders and plastic bag organizers. Charlotte's Elizabeth Lopez Fashion showcased vintage and recycled designer apparel and accessories, while Nana Moon Spark of Concord offered macrame, crochet pieces, and beauty

For over three decades, La Fiesta del Pueblo has grown alongside the region's Hispanic population, reflecting its evolving stories, challenges, and triumphs. As the festival expands each year, so does its importance as a cultural cornerstone in North Carolina.

HealthySteps Pediatric — CONTINUED FROM PAGE 5

Alice Eaton, who has been a HealthySteps specialist in Guilford County for four years, said she talks to families about a variety of issues, from eating and sleeping to development and behavior. Mental health of the entire family also is discussed.

"One of the unique things about HealthySteps is that we're hopefully there from the very beginning, whether there's a concrete need or not," Eaton said. "If something were to come up, we're kind of a friendly face, especially in a lot of practices where you might see different providers every time, or different nurses every time, where there's a lot of changing

A favorite part of the job for Eaton is watching families change and grow, especially parents, who grow in their "Parents are really appreciative when they know that there's someone that they can call or talk to even between visits," she said.

Even parents who've already had children often find themselves with questions about something they didn't encounter with their other children, or that was easier with a previous child, Eaton said.

Everyone has access to the HealthySteps specialist. Families don't have to sign up or meet any qualifications to get services.

Even if one child ages out, many times families will have another child young enough to be part of HealthySteps, so they continue to get those support services, said Samantha Prior, Zero to Three's senior communications director.

That's the case for Robinson, whose family will still be served by the program when Milo ages out because her 1-year-old daughter, Malia, qualifies. She said HealthySteps has been invaluable to her family. It has been a lifeline for her. Moms are supposed to be like superheroes, Robinson said.

ASHLEY AND DONTE ROBINSON WITH THEIR CHILDREN, IN-CLUDING 3-YEAR-OLD MILO (HEALTHYSTEPS)

"We're supposed to do all the things, but we need support and help too, and sometimes it's not easy to say Funding

There's been a lot of interest in expanding the program in the state, that, or to even know where you can go to get that type of support.

things," she said. "And we do do all the funding source.

including creating sites in Charlotte and Goldsboro, as well as eastern and western North Carolina, Tackitt said. The main holdup is often funding. In Guilford County, financial backing has come from philanthropic groups. The Duke Endowment and Blue Meridian Partners supported the launch, but once that initial money dries up, other sources will need to be found, Tackitt said. She said that was the plan all along and that the HealthySteps national office is working with the Children's Home Society on finding ways to support the program once the initial money is gone. (Disclaimer: NC Health News also receives grant funding from the Duke Endowment. NC Health News funders have no input into editorial decisions.)

The Lincoln Community Health Center site in Durham got initial funding from a federal grant through the Health Resources and Services Administration.

A lot of the work that Zero to Three does with partners launching HealthySteps is to look at creating sustainable funding, Prior said.

Many programs start with philanthropic funding or grants, but they need consistent support to continue, she said. In New York, grants through that state's Office of Mental Health covered startup and implementation costs. South Carolina used federal pandemic aid through the state's Education Department with a goal of school readiness because there is evidence that HealthySteps can improve school readiness, Tackitt said.

Some states have turned to Medicaid reimbursement as a sustainable

Church

The Carolinian

Ethically, Should Pastors Use AI for Church Ministry? to be driven by self-centric, earthly focused motivations (1 Peter 5:2) but

By Patricia Engler

A new era has dawned in church history. For over two millennia, Christians who gathered to hear teachings from God's Word could safely assume the teacher would be human. In June 2023, however, over 300 people flocked to St. Paul's church in Fuerth, Germany, to hear from a virtual preacher powered by artificial intelligence (AI). The following year, Christian headlines reported, "Pastor Creates AI Version of Himself Offering Personalized 1-on-1 Prayer." Similarly, websites such as ai-pastor.com advertise individually tailored sermons, devotionals, Scripture analyses, and prayer support from chatbot "pastors." Not even having a flesh-and-blood pastor guarantees hearing fully humanauthored sermons, given how companies like SermonDone encourage pastors to copy, paste, and preach AI-generated messages.

With AI unlocking novel possibilities and raising new questions within ministerial contexts, pastors need biblical, ethical boundaries for using AI in ministry. In response, this four-part paper argues that, while AI can be a useful support for certain purposes such as research, AI should not replace pastors' spiritual leadership responsibilities such as personal Scripture study, sermon preparation, and pastoral care.

Part One examines a biblical understanding of four concepts: the church, the pastor, the sermon, and technology. Part Two introduces the basics of what generative AI is, how this technology works, and how AI differs from human intelligence. Part Three describes common practices and rationale regarding the use of AI in pastoral ministry. Finally, Part Four applies theological concepts from Part One to argue against outsourcing personal Scripture study, sermon preparation, and pastoral

The Ministerial Context: The Church To draw biblical boundaries for AI in churches, we need to consider what God's Word says about the nature, purpose, and structure of the church. We can glean initial insights into the church's nature from considering the word church itself, known in the Greek New Testament body of Christ" (Ephesians 4:11–12).

(NT) as 'ekklesia.' The Septuagint renders ekklesia as the Hebrew term 'qahal,' which exclusively refers to the physical assembly of God's covenant people. The NT use of ekklesia also refers to an embodied community of God's people, now under the new covenant in Christ. Scripture depicts this new covenant community as God's flock (1 Peter 5:2) and as Christ's own body and beautiful Bride (Ephesians 5:29-32). Ultimately, Revelation 7:9 portrays the church's fulfillment as an eschatological gathering of all God's redeemed people. By nature, then, the church is an embodied, eschatological assembly of human believers unified in

The church's purpose and structure reflect its nature. On earth, the church gathers in local congregations that function as "embassies" of God's kingdom, pointing to heavenly realities. In view of these realities, the church works to make disciples (Matthew 28:18-19) and to edify, equip, and mobilize believers as Ephesians 4:11–16 describes. This passage lists various offices of church leaders, including "shepherds and teachers," whom God ordains to work together for "building up the The church's structure thus flows from its God-given purpose, with human leaders serving God's people under Christ, the church's head (Ephesians 5:23).

The Ministerial Person: The Pastor As 1 Peter 5:2 indicates, the pastor's high calling is to serve as an embodied, human shepherd of God's embodied, human flock (cf. John 21:15-17). How does Scripture portray the shepherd's responsibilities? Primarily, the shepherd feeds the sheep by preaching God's Word (1 Timothy 4:13; 2 Timothy 2:15, 4:1-2). The shepherd also leads the sheep by personal example, following the example of Christ (1 Timothy 4:12; 1 Peter 5:3; cf. 1 Corinthians 1:11). Meanwhile, the shepherd protects the sheep by defending against false doctrine (2 Timothy 4:3). The shepherd additionally corrects the sheep who are going astray, guiding them through appropriate exhortation, reproof, and discipline (2 Timothy 4:2). Along the way, the shepherd tends to sheep in need by providing pastoral care. In all these responsibilities, the pastor answers to the chief Shepherd, Jesus (1 Peter 5:4).

The habits, hallmarks, and heart of the shepherd harmonize with these responsibilities. The habits of

An avid golfer, Dr. Colson was a devoted member and later president of the Golf Players Association of and NT, God's human messenger communicates God's Word to God's people in a particular time and place. Nehemiah 8:8 depicts preaching as both proclaiming and explaining Scripture, a pattern that carries into the NT in 1 Timothy 4:13.15 The scriptural pattern of preaching is God-centered, Bible-focused, and aligned with the biblical responsibilities, habits, hallmarks, and heart of Scripture also clarifies the purthe shepherd include deep personal pose of preaching. As theologian Scripture study and meditation, prayer, accountability to others, David Christensen surmises from Colossians 1:28, "Our purpose in and the active pursuit of godliness (1 Timothy 4:7-10, 6:11; 2 Timoproclaiming Christ is nothing short thy 2:21-23). The hallmarks of the of leading each person to completion in Christ." In line with this purpose, shepherd include personal diligence (1 Timothy 4:7-16; 2 Timothy 2:15), preaching is context specific. The integrity (1 Timothy 4:7-16, 6:11; sermon delivers God's Word to this 2 Timothy 2:21-23; Titus 1:5-9), group of God's people in this place perseverance (2 Timothy 2:1-6), at this time with these needs.Disand faithfulness, resisting comprocerning and communicating God's heart for this congregation requires mise in both lifestyle and teaching (1 Timothy 6:13-14). And the heart diligent prayer, study, reflection, and of the shepherd beats for something relational reliance on Christ. As Paul higher than itself. The pastor is not rather by love for the awesome chief

The Ministerial Message:

The Sermon

herds as teachers in Ephesians 4:11,

Paul's letters to church leaders consistently emphasize the importance of teaching sound doctrine (e.g.,

1 Timothy 4:13; 2 Timothy 2:15,

4:1-2; Titus 2:1). This emphasis highlights the role of preaching as a primary responsibility for pastors. In Scripture's portrayal of preaching across both the Old Testament (OT)

Along with characterizing shep-

Shepherd (1 Peter 5:4).

gitation of your favorite exegetical commentary. . . . It is bringing the transforming truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ from a passage that has been properly understood, cogently and practically applied, and delivered with the engaging tenderness and passion of a person who has been broken and restored by the very truths he stands up to communicate. You simply cannot do this without proper preparation, meditation, confession, and worship. Underscoring this need for personal diligence, Scripture repeatedly characterizes preaching as labor (1 Timothy 5:7). Christensen unpacks the NT definition of labor as involving struggle, striving, and even a sort of agony, adding that God's Spirit empowers this labor. Part of this labor requires careful study, along with basking in the richness of Scripture as only a human in relationship with God can do (Psalm 119:18).

The Ministerial Media: Technology Whether in the form of paper and ink or pixels and screens, technologies can support (but cannot appropriately supplant) human ministry. As software engineer and theologian John Dyer describes, technology is a gift to steward for the good of humans and creation. Dyer also stresses that no technology is value neutral. Instead, every technology reflects the values of its users and developers. Additionally, even well-intended uses of technology can yield non-neutral consequences. For these reasons, wisely stewarding technology requires anticipating how specific applications of technology may impact our thinking, behaviors,

Practical Biblical Principles

TO BE SIFTED LIKE WHEAT

Read: Luke 22:31-38 By John L. Caldwell, Pastor

New Jerusalem Baptist Cathedral Like many today who are the targets of the enemy, the devil had his eyes upon Peter long before Peter denied knowing our Lord three times. Peter had cracked the door earlier for the devil to come into his life and set up shop, so to speak. Peter opened the door for the enemy to enter his life for the first time when he rebuked the Lord. This was the time when Jesus began to tell His disciples for the first time He was going to be betrayed and put to the cross.

Jesus and His disciples had just feed the 4,000 plus people in the mountains around Galilee and then traveled some thirty plus miles north to the city of Caesarea Philippi. It was here Jesus ask his disciples, "Who do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" The short of this questioning session, Peter answered and said, "You are the Christ, the Son of the living God. Peter had now been with Christ some two and half years. Jesus revealed to Peter that only God could have revealed that truth to Peter. Jesus then said to Peter, "I will build my Church on the faith that you have Peter and will give you the eys to the Kingdom of heaven. Such promises to Peter indicates that Peter was a vessel of gold to God and filled with the Spirit of God. For the Holy Spirit had yet to permanently fall upon the chosen individu-

It was soon after this incident Jesus begin to tell His disciples that He was going to be betrayed and killed in Jerusalem. Peter, whose collective mind was on "that" Messiah that would come and defeat the Romans and free the Jews from such restricting occupation. Therefore, Peter's Old Testament mind could not accept what Christ had just told them about His pending death in Jerusalem. Peter was focused on his own agenda, took Jesus aside and begin to rebuke Him saying, "Far be it from You, Lord; this shall not happen to You! Jesus then turned to Peter and rebuked him saying, "Get thee behind Me, Satan! You are an offense to Me, for you are not mindful of the things of God, but the things of men" (Matthew 16:22-23). It was here that Peter opened the door for the devil to come into his life. The devil now had seen a weak spot in Peter's armor. The devil has now seen that Peter is arrogant and capable of showing no respect for the words the Lord says or teaches. Not only that, Peter, made himself equal to Christ when he told Christ what is not going to happen to Him. You can bet your bottom dollar the devil took note of Peter's behavior at this time. This all happened just moments after Peter had declared that Jesus was the "Son of the Living

It was not just Peter who was in danger. The word "you" in Luke 22:31 is plural. Jesus was speaking to Peter, informing him that the devil had his sights set on all the disciples. It was then Jesus said to His disciples, "Take up your cross" (Matthew 16:24-25).

A few months later, It was not long after Jesus and His disciples arrived in Jerusalem. This would be Jesus' last trip to the city. Before the cross, Jesus had koinonia in the Upper Room with His disciples telling them he was about to return to His father. The devil was there also. First it was Judas, the thief, the devil made good use of by having him betray Jesus. The disciples were already filled with sorrow about the Lord's leaving them. The devil jumped again, and his next event was to have the disciples argue about who will be the great one in heaven next to Jesus (Luke 22: 24).

N.C.'s Twice-Weekly African American Newspaper

SUBSCRIBE TODAY

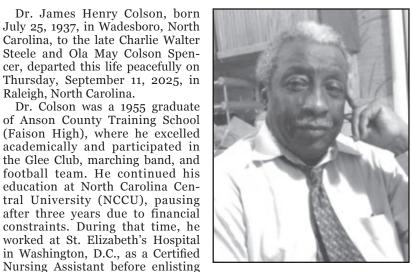

Jesus having decerned the devil was in the room as well. Our Lord then turns to Peter and said in a warning, "Simon, Simon! Indeed, satan has asked for you, that he may sift you as wheat" (Luke 22: 31- 32). The devil didn't come to Jesus asking Him for Peter. Jesus decerned what was in the devil's heart about Peter. "But I have prayed for you that your faith "should," not fail; (not "would not fail" which would imply a "slam dunk" for Peter. The word "should" imply Peter will also have to do some "heavy lifting" in his own faith in order to become victorious) and when you have returned to Me, strengthened your brethren." Peter said. "Lord, I am ready to go with You, both to prison and to death." Then Jesus replies to Peter, "I tell you Peter, the rooster shall not crow this day before you will deny three times that you know Me" (Luke 22:34).

Trials are expected in the Christian life. We must go through many hardships to enter the kingdom of God (Acts 14:22) God uses these experiences for our good (Romans 8:28-29) to refine our character and strengthen our faith to make us more like Jesus (1 Peter 1:6-7; James 1:2-4, 12). Whenever we do experience a test, Jesus is with us to strengthen us and intercede for us (Hebrew 7:25; Philippians 4:13).

Before, Peter was overconfident, trusting in his own strength (Luke 22:33). But after being sifted like wheat, Peter learned that failure is possible because the flesh is weak (Mark 14:38). Now that he understood how easy it is to fall, Peter would now have greater compassion and mercy for others while helping them avoid the same mistake.

Our true faith and perseverance are revealed not in a walk of sinless perfection but in repentance and restoration. We get up and keep going like Peter, after we fall.

Obituaries

DR. JAMES HENRY COLSON

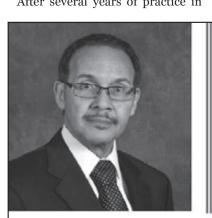

Washington, D.C., Dr. Colson and his wife relocated to Raleigh, North Carolina, to participate in a state loan redemption program. He became a dedicated member of the Phi Lambda Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha and established a successful dental practice in downtown Raleigh. Later, he joined a pioneering group of Black professionals in developing a landmark professional building in South Raleigh to expand access to care and services in the community.

Dr. Colson was a faithful member of St. Ambrose Episcopal Church, where he served on the vestry and as senior warden. Under his leadership, the parish launched a hospitality ministry to strengthen fellowship and implemented a capital fund-After several years of practice in raising campaign that raised over

Raleigh, participating in tournaments across the country. His civic engagement extended to political and professional organizations, including the Wake County Demo-cratic Party, the Wake County Black Democratic Caucus, and the State-wide Black Leadership Caucus. He held leadership positions through-out his life, including president of the Phi Lambda Chapter of Alpha Phi Alpha, senior warden of St. Ambrose Episcopal Church, president of the Golf Players Association of Raleigh, and president of the Raleigh component of the National Dental Association. Dr. Colson is survived by his loving wife, Dr. Lacy Colson; his children, Dr. James H. Colson II (Danette Charles) and Dr. Mel-landa Colson Scott (Don); his niece Cvnthia Marrow (Barry); and his cherished grandchildren, Jaden and Peyton. Stepmother Marzella Steele (deceased), Sisters Mary Carr, Mellie Colson (deceased), Deborah Steele, Chardayle Robinson (Wilburn), Millicent Steele, Hazelene Steele, Maricoma "Peaches" Hughes (James), Brothers Manzell Spencer (Hester), Lewis Spencer, Jr, Sandy Steele (Deborah), Carl Steele (deceased), and a generous amount of nieces and nephews

His life was defined by service, leadership, and an enduring commitment to his family, community, and faith.

in the United States Army, where he served honorably as a Green Beret

Following his military service,

Dr. Colson returned to NCCU, earning a Bachelor of Science degree in Chemistry and beginning graduate studies in 1964. It was there he met his future wife, Lacy, also a science major. They graduated and were married on the same day, marking the beginning of a lifelong partner-

The couple resided briefly in Massachusetts before Dr. Colson enrolled in Howard University College of Dentistry in 1967. While at Howard, he was initiated into the

Omicron Lambda Chapter of Alpha

Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc., in 1969. He earned his Doctor of Dental Surgery degree in 1971.

and paratrooper.

"Our family serving your family for 110 years"

www.haywoodfh.com

919-832-2835 2415 S Wilmington Street Raleigh, NC 27603

Yes, I Want A 1 Year Subscription For$45.00 Yes, I Want A 2 Year Subscription For$75.00 _____ STATE ___ ZIP____

Make checks payable to The Carolinian Newspaper Mail your subscription form and payment to PO Box 25308 Raleigh, NC 27611

Editorials

Editorial Policy

Unsigned editorials in this space are the opinion of the newspaper. All other opinion pieces, including those from regular columnists, are the opinion of the writers themselves. The Carolinian strives to provide provocative commentary that is likely to spur thoughtful debate, regardless of whether we agree with it.

Kirk's Assassination: The Left's Big Denial By Larry Elder

Despite data showing the willingness of the "very liberal" to support violence to achieve political ends, Democrats like Rep. Pat Ryan (D-N.Y.) deny that calling political opponents "fascists" or "Nazis" or "Hitler" contributes to the "overall problem."

Ryan said: "I actually don't think it does. I think people are trying to grapple with a really unprecedented time in our country where we're seeing maybe history not fully repeat, but history rhyme at some of the darkest times in our world's history and struggling in good faith to try to put some intellectual thought into that and find the right language ... I think not being honored by this president, that's hard to figure out how to, how to put word to that in a way that is constructive."

In short, how would one describe a "fascist" without calling him and, by extension, his supporters, "fascist"? Quite the dilemma. At this point, it's probably useless to point out how Adolf Hitler, unlike President Donald Trump, murdered his political enemies; controlled the media and the arts through censorship, intimidation and propaganda; arrested and detained adversaries indefinitely and without trial; murdered 6 million Jews and 5 million others; and ignited a world war that resulted in an estimated 50 million civilians dead worldwide.

Virtually every policy Trump enacts or attempts to enact ends up in court. He appeals unfavorable district court decisions, many of which end up at the Supreme Court, where Trump usually wins. Still, Trump's critics call him a "tyrant" and a "dictator."

Examine the judicial system under Hitler's Germany. The Holocaust Encyclopedia writes: "... Like most areas of public life after the Nazi rise to power in 1933, the German system of justice underwent 'coordination' (alignment with Nazi goals). All professional associations involved with the administration of justice were merged into the National Socialist League of German Jurists."

Comparing Trump, a democratically elected leader, to Hitler is, was and always will be insanely and profoundly ignorant. It is insidious.

Former Democrat House Speaker Nancy Pelosi said, "People don't have the intention of saying something that will lead to something dangerous (so) we cannot take responsibility for the minds that are out there and how they hear it."

How did Charlie Kirk's suspected assassin, Tyler Robinson, "hear it"?

After Robinson shot Kirk, he texted his roommate/partner, a man transitioning to be a woman. Robinson told his partner to find and read a message Robinson left before the assassination. It read: "I had the opportunity to take out Charlie Kirk and I'm going to take it."

Partner: "You weren't the one who did it right????"

Robinson: "I am, I'm sorry."

When asked why, Robinson responded: "I had enough of his hatred. Some hate can't be negotiated out."

On the ammunition found with his rifle were several phrases including, "Hey, fascist! Catch!"

Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) insists her party comes to the debate with clean hands because, well, you know, Trump. Warren said: "Oh, please. Right. Why don't you start with the president of the United States? Right? And every ugly meme he has posted and every ugly word ..."

Let's start with the president. It was former President Joe Biden who said, "It's not just Trump, it's the entire philosophy that underpins the — I'm going to say something, it's like semi-fascism."

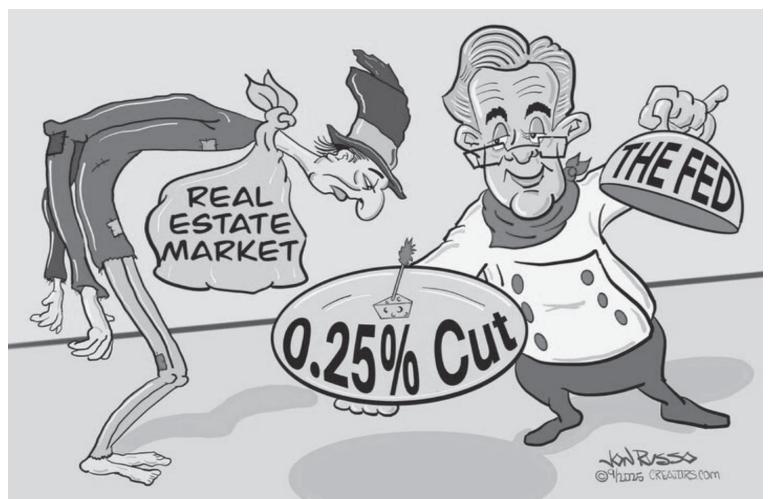

Vice President and then-presidential candidate Kamala Harris, when asked whether she considered Trump "a fascist," responded: "Yes, I do. Yes, I do. ... He's saying to his generals, in essence, why can't you be more like Hitler's generals? Come on!"

A YouGov poll taken after Kirk's assassination found that 25% of the self-described "very liberal" believe political violence is sometimes acceptable to achieve political goals. This is eight times the number of the self-described "very conservative" who feel likewise. Last year, a report affiliated with Rutgers University called "Assassination Culture" wrote: "Over half of those who self-identified as left of center (56%) reported that if someone murdered Donald Trump, they would at least be somewhat justified ... This includes 14.1% who said this murder would be 'Completely Justified."

In 2008, then-presidential candidate Barack Obama, accused of merely uttering empty words, said: "Don't tell me words don't matter. 'I have a dream' — just words? 'We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal' — just words?"

Larry Elder is a bestselling author and nationally syndicated radio talk-show host.

CONSCIOUS SPEAKING

If you are willing to pay attention to life, there are valuable lessons to be learned. I've mentioned before the power of words.

Words affect the body—our own words and the words spoken to us by others. A man once conducted an experiment where he placed jars of water in a room. Different people were invited to speak a single word or phrase to the water, and a label was placed on each jar. Later, crystals were scraped from the water and examined under a microscope. The crystals reflected the words: ugly words produced ugly crystals, while beautiful words created beautiful crystals.

Yes, I know I've shared this before, but some readers are encountering these ideas for the first time, so I repeat them. If you search "Messages in Water," you can see this for yourself. For me, it was an opportunity to become mindful of how I speak and write, especially to children. When I conducted workshops for parents and teachers, I included this video to encourage them to reflect on the words they use.

What happens to a child when they hear: You can't learn. You're not smart. I'm disappointed in you? Not every child believes it, but too many do. It stunts their growth and makes them feel unworthy, undervalued, and unimportant. If we remembered that God is always listening, would we still declare negative prophecies over His creation?

When I was earning my master's degree, I took a required course in sex therapy. On the first day, the professor asked us to share words commonly used to describe sexual intercourse and genitalia. I was shocked at the violent and demeaning words my classmates used. I won't give examples, but many were abhorrent to me. The rest of the quarter was spent exploring how to cultivate healthy sexual relationships for our clients.

How can we hope to help others when even our own beliefs about sex are so negative, confused, and ignorant? Words carry energy. Many words we casually use are counterproductive to what we actually want to express. For example, I often used to say, "It hit me" or "It struck me" when I had an idea. But do I really want to invite the energy of being struck or hit, even by a good thought? Instead, I've learned to say, "A thought came to me" or "I had an idea." Doesn't that feel better?

I admit, I'm guilty of using careless language. Words linger in the air, and too often, I catch myself saying things I don't truly mean. Recently, a friend of mine passed away. For years, her conversation revolved around saying, "I want to die" and expressing hatred toward a certain ethnic group. In my last conversation with her, I begged, "Please don't say that—those words carry energy, and you will attract it." Sadly, not long after, she died in a car accident caused by a member of the very group she spoke against.

Another woman I knew often said she was "sick" of the person she lived with. She eventually developed a disease that claimed her life. A man I knew used to say, "I'm not going to get that job"—and he never did. When he said, "They're going to offer me that job," they did. Was he a prophet or a manifester? I don't know. But I believe in the power of words enough to monitor my own.

Kinesiology research has shown that the word try weakens the body, while the words I am strengthen it. Here's an experiment: hold your arm out while someone presses down as you say, "I'm trying to hold my arm up." Then, repeat while saying, "I am holding my arm up." The difference is noticeable. Think about how often we tell children to try. Could we be unintentionally weakening them with our encouragement?

Do I know all of this for a fact? No. But I know what I've experienced, and I believe in it. I've also witnessed how giving children specific descriptions of the behavior we want is far more effective than vague commands like, "Be good."

I once knew a little boy who was told to "be good," but it didn't change his behavior. However, when he was taught that if he wanted to answer a question in school, he should raise his hand high instead of yelling out, he learned quickly. Many children need to be shown how to do something, not just told to "be good." That doesn't mean they're bad—it means they need guidance.

The Bible says God spoke the world into existence: "Let there be light," and there was light. We are not God, but we are made in His image. If that is true, could it also be true that what we say influences our lives? Jesus said, "As a man thinks in his heart, so is he." He also taught that harboring lust in one's heart is equivalent to committing the act, and that anger can lead to destruction. Our thoughts and words carry real power.

From my own experience, I've learned that peace in my heart allows me to get along better with others than fear or condemnation ever could. Affirming and positive thoughts always return to me. So, my advice is: why not choose them?

FUNdraising Good Times

By Mel & Pearl Shaw Saad & Shaw

IS MANAGEMENT A BAD WORD?

In the world of fundraising, whatever "glory" can be obtained usually comes in the form of titles. There is a hierarchy implied within titles such as senior vice president, vice president, director, coordinator, or associate. There's nothing the matter with titles, but sometimes they can keep us from seeing each other as equals. And sometimes those in executive leadership can feel the work of "managing" is below their

We believe that fundraising is a team process with a shared outcome led by a person who takes responsibility for managing the fundraising process and sharing information that leads to collective success. This makes an executive or a director more of a coach than the person at the top of a pyramid. As a coach, you play the critical role of ensuring those on your team have the resources they need to fulfill their roles and responsibilities. It means you have a game plan, more frequently referred to as a fundraising plan. The plan has to be more than a spreadsheet with high-level financial milestones. You'll need to know how much vour organization anticipates raising through events, online giving, board giving and solicitation, individual major gifts, sponsorships, corporate gifts and grants, foundation grants, direct mail, and/or government grants. You will want to know who exactly the prospects are within each revenue category, and what you anticipate receiving and when. Finally, because not everyone who supports your organization or institution will give at the level you anticipate, we strongly recommend working with a pool of prospects for each giving category that is three

It is a lot of work to create such a plan, but it pays off if you use it. As the coach, you are working with team members to ensure they know who they are engaging and towards what end. You are reviewing progress reports and adjusting the plan as needed. Most importantly, you are a manager of people – your staff and ideally the volunteers who are engaged in fundraising. Yes, you have your own portfolio of donors to strategically engage and solicit, but that is not your sole responsibility. As the leader of the fundraising team, you are a manager. If you feel that this is below your pay grade or that it is not making the best use of your time, you may be in the wrong position. You may be a major gifts officer or a special gifts officer, but not the right executive or director of a fundraising team. That person is a member of the team.

So, here we are, back to titles and the word "manager." The person who manages the fundraising process is not a lower-level person. This individual is experienced with multiple fundraising methods and can support their team. It is an honor to manage a process and a team – it is not a demotion. Let's play ball! God protect America and the world we live within.

Classifieds

DURHAM COUNTY

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice. Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E001186-310 THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 10th day of September 2025, as EXECUTOR of the Estate of MARY ENSLEY WESTMORELAND, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 26th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 25th day of September

Joseph Bryan Westmoreland Executor

3159 Rose of Sharon Road Durham, NC 27712 9/25, 10/2, 10/9, and 10/16/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E001075-310 THE UNDERSIGNED, having

qualified on the 15th day of August 2025, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of WILLIAM HENRY AMOS, SR., Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 26th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 25th day of September 2025.

Denise Parker Administrator 401 Archdale Dr #1306 Durham, NC 27707 9/25, 10/2, 10/9, and 10/16/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS File Number 25E001105-310

ALL PERSONS, firms and corporations having claims against Edward Watkins Meeler, deceased, of Durham County, N.C., are notified to exhibit the same to the undersigned on or before 12-29-2025, or this notice will be pleaded in bar of recovery. Debtors of the decedent are asked to make immediate payment. This 9-23-

Betty E. Meeler, Executor of the Estate of Edward Watkins Meeler c/o Lori M. Bernstein, Attorney at Law

2726 Croasdaile Dr. Suite 202 Durham, North Carolina 27705 For Publication: 9-25, 10-2, 10-9, 10-16-2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

DURHAM COUNTY

File Number 25E001099-310 ALL PERSONS, firms and corporations having claims against LYNNISE MICHELLE HAWES, deceased, of Durham County, N.C., are notified to exhibit the same to the undersigned on or before 12/18/2025, or this notice will be pleaded in bar of recovery. Debtors of the decedent are asked to make immediate payment. This September 18, 2025.

503 Dunbar St Durham, NC 27701 9/18, 9/25, 10/2, and 10/9/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

Diann Walker

DURHAM COUNTY NOTICE TO CREDITORS Estate Of Brenda Joyce Mcneil

File No. 23E004613-910

All person, firms and corporations having claims against BRENDA JOYCE MCNEIL, deceased, of Wake County, NC, are notified to exhibit the same to the undersigned on or before December 19, 2025, or this notice will be pleaded in bar of recovery. Debtors of the decedent are asked to make immediate payment. This the 18th day of September, 2025. Bonnie L. McNeil, Administrator, c/o Blue LLP, 205 Fayetteville St,

10/9/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE MATTER OF THE ESTATE

Suite 300, Raleigh, NC 27601. The Carolinian, 9/18, 9/25, 10/2, and

File Number 25E001023-310

DURHAM COUNTY OF DOROTHY Y. JENNETTE corporations having claims against Dorothy Y. Jennette, deceased, of Durham County, N.C., are notified to exhibit the same to the undersigned on or before December 19, 2025 or this notice will be pleaded in bar of recovery. Debtors of the decedent are asked to make immediate payment. This 18th day of September 2025, Floyd B. McKissick, III, McKissick & McKissick, 835 N Mangum Street, Durham, NC 27701; The Carolinian, 9/18, 9/25, 10/2, and 10/9/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS File Number 25E001106-310

The undersigned, Prince L. Thompson, having duly qualified as Administrator of the Estate of DEBORAH R. THOMPSON, deceased, late of Durham County, North Carolina, hereby notifies all persons, firms and corporations having claims against the Estate to present them to the undersigned in care of Ronald G. Coulter, Attorney for the Estate, 3400 Croasdaile Dr., Ste 205, Durham, NC 27705, on or before December 15, 2025 or it will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons and legal entities indebted to the Estate will please make immediate payment. This the 11th day of September,

Prince L. Thompson, Administrator C/O Ronald G. Coulter, Attorney 3400 Croasdaile Drive Ste 205 Durham, NC 27705 1-919-246-5775 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 24E002521-310 UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 2nd day of December 2024, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of ASHLEY NICOLE HANNAH, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 12th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned. This, the 11th day of September 2025.

Janie Nelson, Administrator 1204 Fidelity Drive Durham, NC 27703 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk File Number 25E001128-310

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 27th day of August 2025, as EXECUTOR of the Estate of JANIE DELORES MCLEAN, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 12th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned. This, the 11th day of September

Darvlyn McLean, Executor 2202 Magnolia Tree Lane Durham, NC 27703 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

> NOTICE TO CREDITORS File Number 25E001031-310

ALL PERSONS, firms and corporations having claims against Wanda O'Shinski Moore a/k/a Wanda Henriette Moore, deceased, of Durham County, N.C., are notified to exhibit the same to the undersigned on or before 12-12-2025, or this notice will be pleaded in bar of recovery. Debtors of the decedent are asked to make immediate payment. This 9-11-

Mark H. Webbink, Executor of the Estate of Wanda O'Shinski Moore a/k/a Wanda Henriette Moore c/o Lori M. Bernstein, Attorney at Law 2726 Croasdaile Dr. Suite 202 Durham, North Carolina 27705 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS ESTATE OF David Bradley Hull Estate File No. 25E000801-310

All persons, firms and corporations having claims against David Bradley Hull, deceased, of

ALL PERSONS, firms, and Durham County, North Carolina, are notified to present their claims to Roy D. Hull and Lynn M. Hull, Co-Executors, at 105 Hampshire Place, Chapel Hill, North Carolina 27516, on or before the 11th day of December, 2025 (which date is three months after the day of the first publication of this notice), or this notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. Debtors of the Decedent are requested to make immediate payment to the Executor/Administrator named

This the 11th day of September,

Roy D. Hull and Lynn M. Hull Co-Executors of the Estate of David Bradley Hull Alexander J. Palme Averett Family Law Attorneys for the Estate 101 Conner Drive, STE 402 Chapel Hill, NC 27514 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E000993-310 UNDERSIGNED, THE having qualified on the 3rd day of September 2025, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of NANCY GALLUP SCHAEFER, Deceased, of Wake County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 12th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned. This, the 11th day of September

William S. Schaefer, c/o Richard F. Prentis, Jr., 4 Consultant Pl., Durham, NC 27707 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E000619-310 THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 8th day of May 2025, as EXECUTOR of the Estate of SHIRLEY ELIZABETH BRADSHAW, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned. This, the 4th day of September 2025.

Natalyn R. Bradshaw, Executor 531 Uzzle Street Durham, NC 27713 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E000960-310

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 23rd day of July 2025, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of JOE HOWARD BULLOCK, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 4th day of September

Jokyra Bullock Scott, Administrator 7415 Russell Road Durham, NC 27712 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division

Before the Clerk File Number 24E002192-310

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 17th day of June 2025, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of TIMOTHY JAMIL HINTON, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 4th day of September 2025.

Tamika Trappiel Hinton Administrator 70 Ashberry Lane Franklinton, NC 27525 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E000773-310

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 19th day of May 2025, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of SANDRA MARIE MOORE, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 4th day of September

Wesley R. Moore, Administrator c/o Michael C. Hudson Law Office of Michael C. Hudson 105 E. Center St., Suite B-12 Mebane, NC 27302 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E000582-310

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 19th day of May 2025, as EXECUTOR of the Estate of MARIE ALENA SINGLETARY, Deceased, of Durham County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 4th day of September

Daron D. Satterfield, Attorney for Personal Representative, Reuben Tobia Singletary 24 Stonewall Way Durham, NC 27704 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA DURHAM COUNTY

NOTICE OF SERVICE OF PROCESS BY PUBLICATION In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 24SP001956-310 Crystal DeSilva v. Christopher Jamison

To: Christopher Jamison: Take notice that a pleading seeking relief against you has been filed in the above-entitled action. The nature of the relief being sought against you is as follows: Partition for Partition and to Sell Property. The Petitioner wishes to sell real property for Christoper Jamison has an interest

You are required to make defense to such pleading not later than 40 days from and upon your failure to do so the party seeking service against you will apply to the court for the relief sought. This the 4th day of September, 2025.

Daron D. Satterfield Satterfield Law, PLLC 307 Meadowlands Drive, Suite 101 Hillsborough, NC 27278 (984) 229-8584 (919) 287-2696 fax 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025

WAKE COUNTY

NOTICE OF SERVICE OF PROCESS BY PUBLICATION NORTH CAROLINA WAKE COUNTY

In the General Court of Justice District Court Division Case No: 25CV003018-500 [CHILD CUSTODY PROCEEDING]

Juan Carlos Villalobos Reyes,

Abigail Perez-Cazarin,

Plaintiff

Defendant. To Juan Carlos Villalobos Reyes, Please note that a custody action has been filed in respect of the minor children in the previous Court. You must respond within 30 days of the first posting of this notice.

Otherwise, the requested reparation may be granted.

This is the 25th day of September 2025. Adrianna V Ingram

Vasquez Law Firm PLLC 612 S Brightleaf Blvd Smithfield, North Carolina 27577 919-989-3000 9/25, 10/2 and 10/9/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

WAKE COUNTY NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division

Before the Clerk File Number 25E001934-910

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 14th day of May 2024, as EXECUTOR of the Estate of FREDERICK MATTHEW VUKOVICH, Deceased, of Wake County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 26th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned. This, the 25th day of September

Nadine Vukovich, Executor 8033 Hawkshead Rd. Wake Forest, NC 27587 9/25, 10/2, 10/9, and 10/16/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA WAKE COUNTY

COMPLAINT TO ENFORCE POSSESSORY LIEN ON MOTOR VEHICLE

In The General Court Of Justice District Court Division Small Claims File No. 25CV031993-910

VICTOR CASTILLO, Plaintiff VS. UNKNOWN OWNER VIN NO. 5LVBV12126A012261, Defendant TO UNKNOWN OWNER:

TAKE NOTICE the petitioner has filed with the clerk a petition in proper form indicating that the petitioner has a valid lien against a 2006 HOLMES, ID No. 5LVBV12126A012261 and that the petitioner shall have the right to sell to the highest bidder the motor vehicle listed on October 27, 2025 at WCCH, 316 Fayetteville St., 3rd Floor, Raleigh, NC 27601, at 9:30 a.m. You are required to make a defense to such pleading before such date and time.

This the 18th day of September, 2025.

Victor Castillo, Plaintiff 3944 Haithcock Rd. Raleigh, NC 27604 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA WAKE COUNTY

NOTICE OF SERVICE OF PROCESS BY PUBLICATION In District Court-Civil Proceedings

File Number 23CV023466-910 CELIA VIVIAN ARAGON CRUZ, Plaintiff VS. PERCY RAPHEAL BROWN, Defendant

TO PERCY RAPHEAL BROWN: Take notice that is hereby given, that in the hearing for Plaintiff's Motion to Compel on the above referenced matter originally issued August 23, 2023, has been continued. The new hearing date is set for December 3, 2025 at 9:00am, to be held at the Wake County Courthouse, located at 316 Fayetteville St, Raleigh, NC 27601, District Courtroom 2C. This continuance order was issued by the Clerk of Superior Court 2025. on September 2, 2025. You are required to make an appearance, and upon your failure to do so the party seeking service against you will apply to the court for the relief sought. This, the 18th day of September, 2025. 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA WAKE COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division Before the Clerk

File Number 25E003404-910 THE UNDERSIGNED, having

qualified on the 29th day of August 2025, as ADMINISTRATOR of the Estate of THOMAS AUSTIN OLANDER, Deceased, of Wake County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned.

This, the 4th day of September 2025.

Jeffrey Eric Olander, Administrator 501 Driewood Court Raleigh, NC 27609 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025 STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA

WAKE COUNTY NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division

Before the Clerk

File Number 25E002720-910 THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 25th day of August 2025, as EXECUTOR of the Estate of KAREN FAITH MERRIS, Deceased, of Wake County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 5th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said

payment to the undersigned. This, the 4th day of September 2025.

Estate will please make immediate

Mark Douglas Weber, Executor 4901 Silver Fox Lane Efland, NC 27243 9/4, 9/11, 9/18, and 9/25/2025

WARREN COUNTY

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA WARREN COUNTY

NOTICE TO CREDITORS In the General Court of Justice, Superior Court Division

Before the Clerk File Number 16E000257-920

THE UNDERSIGNED, having qualified on the 28th day of October 2024, as ADMINISTRATOR CTA of the Estate of ANDY CLEVELAND ROGERS, Deceased, of Warren County, North Carolina, does hereby notify all persons, firms and corporations having claims against said Estate to exhibit them to the undersigned on or before the 12th day of December, 2025 or this Notice will be pleaded in bar of their recovery. All persons indebted to said Estate will please make immediate payment to the undersigned. This, the 11th day of September

Sandra Smith, Administrator CTA 275 Sweetbrier Ln. Boones Mill, VA 24065 9/11, 9/18, 9/25, and 10/2/2025

BUYING CASSETTE TAPES

Paying cash and buying old Rap music cassette tapes and used blank cassette tapes. Call Marvin 919-268-7476.

ADVERTISEMENT FOR BIDS

The North Carolina Department of Adult Correction has the following contract in Lincoln County out for bid: C- C11750 Lincoln AC installation. The bid opening is scheduled for: Thursday, 11/20/2025. To obtain the Notice to Bidders, any Pre-Bid Requirements, and any Addenda visit: https://evp. nc.gov/solicitations/details/?id=e2381dfa-1b8f-f011-b4cc-001dd8062c20

Subscribe To The Carolinian Today!

www.CARO.news

Classifieds James H. Young—continued from PAGE 2

WANTED WBE, MBE & DBE BIDS

for the following job:

Oxford-Henderson Aeronautics Authority Parallel Taxiway Relocation

Granville Co.

Bid Date: October 2nd

These projects may involve some or all of the following aspects of construction: construction survey, clear and grub, trucking, drainage, milling, paving, incidental concrete, fence and guardrail, signs, structures, traffic control, utilities, signals, pavement marking, erosion control and seeding. Bids can be emailed to stw.quotes@stwcorp.com

Please contact S. T. Wooten at 252-291-5165,

Fax 252-243-0900 no later than 5:00 p.m. the day before the

The North Carolina Department of Transportation, in accordance with the provisions of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 252, 42, US.C. 2000d to 2000d-4) and the Regulations, hereby notifies all bidders that it will affirmatively ensure that any contract entered into pursuant to the advertisement, disadvantaged business enterprises will be afforded full and fair opportunity to submit bids in response to this invitation and will not be discriminated against on the grounds of race, color, or national origin in consideration for an award. In accordance with other related nondiscrimination authorities, bidders and contractors will also not be discriminated against on the grounds of sex, age, disability, low-income level, creed/religion, or limited English proficiency in consideration for an award.

WANTED WBE, MBE & DBE BIDS

for the following job:

NCDOT Division 1 Letting

DA00647 Martin Co.

Bid Date: Oct. 15th

These projects may involve some or all of the following aspects of construction: construction survey, clear and grub, trucking, drainage, milling, paving, incidental concrete, fence and guardrail, signs, structures, traffic control, utilities, signals, pavement marking, erosion control and seeding. Bids can be emailed to stw.quotes@stwcorp.com

Please contact S. T. Wooten at 252-291-5165,

Fax 252-243-0900 no later than 5:00 p.m. the day before the bid date.

The North Carolina Department of Transportation, in accordance with the provisions of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (78 Stat. 252, 42, US.C. 2000d to 2000d-4) and the Regulations, hereby notifies all bidders that it will affirmatively ensure that any contract entered into pursuant to the advertisement, disadvantaged business enterprises will be afforded full and fair opportunity to submit bids in response to this invitation and will not be discriminated against on the grounds of race, color, or national origin in consideration for an award. In accordance with other related nondiscrimination authorities, bidders and contractors will also not be discriminated against on the grounds of sex, age, disability, low-income level, creed/religion, or limited English proficiency in Young's loyalty and skill with appointments that included chief fertilizer inspector and a seat on the board of directors for state institutions serving the deaf, dumb, and blindorganizations Young had supported as a legislator.

In 1898, amid rising racial tensions and the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, Young made history when Governor Russell appointed him colonel of the Third North Carolina Infantry, a regiment of Black

Young is believed to have been the first African American to achieve the rank of colonel in a state volunteer force, although Charles Young holds that distinction in the regular U.S. Army. Despite fierce criticism from the white press-including Josephus Daniels's News and Observer—Young and his troops were ultimately commended for their discipline and performance.

The Fusionists lost ground in the infamous white supremacy campaign of 1898, which sought to undo political gains made by African Americans and their allies. Democrats equated Fusion rule with "Negro rule" and used this narrative to suppress the Black vote and dismantle political power structures that had briefly included African Americans.

In 1899, the new Democratic legislature ordered Young's name removed from the cornerstone of the newly built school for the deaf, dumb, and blind—a symbol of their intent to erase Black contributions to public

In 1899, President William McKinley appointed him deputy revenue collector for the Raleigh district—a post he held under McKinley, Theodore Roosevelt, and William Howard Taft until 1913. That year, President nal organizations, including the Odd structures of Southern society.

ministration removed Young from his position, ending a federal career that had spanned more than 25

His dismissal marked the end of an era, as Young was the last Black man holding a significant federal office in North Carolina at the time.

Retiring from politics, Young devoted himself to business, religion, and civic engagement. He operated a successful insurance and real estate business from the Masonic Temple in Raleigh, presided over the Raleigh Undertaking Company, and served as a director of the Mallette Drug Company. He remained active in Baptist life, working as Sunday school superintendent at First Baptist Church and president of the Baptist State Sunday School Convention. He also held leadership roles in numerous frater-

Woodrow Wilson's Democratic ad- Fellows, Masons, Knights of Pythias, and the Household of Ruth.

Even in retirement, Young remained a respected elder statesman among Black North Carolinians. During World War I, he was frequently invited to speak at patriotic rallies and provided counsel to draft officials regarding the enlistment of Black men. Though his message of racial moderation drew criticism from younger activists who accused him of being too conciliatory, Young remained committed to nonviolence and to building bridges between the races.

James H. Young died in Raleigh on April 11, 1921. At his funeral, held at the First Baptist Church on Person Street and Lenoir Street, people of all races gathered in a powerful display of unity and respect for a man who had spent his life navigating and challenging the deeply segregated

High Speed Internet — CONTINUED FROM PAGE 3

"I think everyone should care about it — even though most people don't live in rural America — because when we electrified the entire country, the entire economy grew," Mitchell said. "We will all benefit from this when everyone has more options to share their knowledge, their gifts and their productivity in the economy.'

Even West Virginia, ranking last in internet connectivity, would have effectively achieved universal broadband under the state's original proposal, according to an unreleased draft of the state's plan obtained by The Benton Institute for Broadband and Society, a policy group. West Virginia has about 78% connectivity, the only state with less than 80%.

But under West Virginia's updated final proposal, submitted to the National Telecommunications and Information Administration earlier this month, tens of thousands of households and businesses will no longer have access to BEAD funding.

West Virginia Republican Gov. Patrick Morrisey said he is still optimistic about the rollout, telling reporters recently that some of the decrease in coverage was because of inaccurate information. Some areas had just a few homes, or addresses only had a barn on the property, he and an aide said.

"We've been trying to target all the available locations that are eligible," the governor said Sept. 18 at a news conference at the West Virginia State Capitol. "It's a pretty fulsome application, and so obviously there were some changes made to accommodate some of the responses from the administration. And in a positive way, they're trying to save money. There are other changes: States and Washington, D.C., may no longer set rates for low-cost residential service options, raising worries that internet providers will put forward quirement, no matter the price. And what was going to be a very promis- they'd acquired internet access from under the "technology-neutral" approach, some locations will no longer be receiving fiber internet, which the federal government previously emphasized due to its speed and du-

The new guidelines also remove provisions that encouraged states to work with companies and representatives from minority communities. Requirements related to labor, the environment and climate change

West Virginia isn't alone. Under the new rules, thousands of households, businesses and community buildings across the country will be disqualified from the federal government's push to provide internet access to the areas that need itmost. And those locations that are still eligible for funding may not receive the best service available — or be able to

West Virginia has one of the country's worst workforce participation rates. Internet access is key to changing that, said Bill Bissett, chairman of the West Virginia Broadband Enhancement Council.

We are hopeful that this new proposal will be supported because we need to get started on this development as soon as possible," Bissett said. "Because the longer we wait, the less people will be connected because of increased costs in deployment and infrastructure."

Following the required revisions, West Virginia fared well compared with other states, said Drew Garner, the director of policy engagement at the Benton Institute. But Garner said he expects frustration in other states.

"West Virginia, because it did a good job with its restructuring, is still going to have a lot of strong outcomes," Garner said. "But across the country in some of these other states, I think there's going to be a lot of frustration with these changes ing outcome.

In June, the Trump administration revised the rules of the BEAD program in what the U.S. Department of Commerce said was an effort to lessen regulatory burdens, reduce costs and streamline the process.

As of Sept. 18, 41 states had submitted their updated final proposals, according to a database from Connected Nation, a nonprofit that advocates for expanded broadband

In December 2022, when the FCC released its updated National Broadband Map, nearly 12 million locations across the country were in need of internet service. Over the years, that number has decreased because of private investments, continued deployment by existing internet providers and additional support from other federal programs.

States originally identified 4.86 million locations that would be eligible for getting internet connectivity through BEAD funds. But that number is projected to fall to 4.19 million locations following revisions initiated by the Trump administration, according to an analysis from Broadband Expanded, a project from the New York Law School. West Virginia was originally slated to deploy broadband to approximately 110,000 locations. Now, 73,560 of those locations will receive BEAD funding, according to the state's new proposal. Connecticut, Massachusetts, Maryland, Nebraska and Rhode Island could see more than half of the locations in their state disqualified from the program. But some of those locations may still be in need of internet, said Garner, of the Benton Institute.

The National Telecommunications and Information Administration (NTIA), which is part of the U.S. states to remove certain locations Examiner.

But, in an effort to save taxpaver money, states also had the option to say they were "financially incapable" of serving a location. "One of the changes the administration made to the BEAD program is that states and the NTIA now have a way to simply say that these locations are just too expensive," Garner said. "They can say, 'It is just going to cost too much, so now we're going to say they're ineligible. The BEAD program's new technology-neutral approach poses another challenge. The original program favored fiber because of its speed, reliability and ability to reach remote locations. But some argue that other technologies would be cheaper. This change has opened the door for satellite internet providers, including Elon Musk's Starlink, to receive money from the program. Starlink could be awarded approximately $10 billion, according to The Wall Street Journal.

In West Virginia, Starlink will serve more than 4,100 locations, according to the governor's office.

"Based on the technology and based on all the evidence we have, some of these technologies - unlicensed fixed wireless especially are not really a reliable internet service that's going to meet the needs of a 21st century household," Garner

Rural advocates speak up

In Nebraska, more than half of the counties in the state have signed onto letters to federal officials objecting to the changes, including the disqualification of nearly half the state's eligible locations.

'It's very frustrating. We have all these holes in our county, and BEAD was going to bring service to those areas," Milford County Commission-Department of Commerce, directed er Misty Ahmic told the Nebraska

North Carolina WARN Act & NC WARN Notices Explained

By Benjamin McBrayer

The North Carolina Worker Adjustment and Retraining Notification (WARN) Act safeguards workers, families, and communities during workforce changes, such as plant closings and mass layoffs. Below is an overview of its components and enforcement, ensuring compliance and employee rights. Read on to learn how to issue a WARN notice in North Carolina and everything else you need to know about the WARN Act in NC!

Over half of the states, including North Carolina, lack their own state-level WARN Act. However, this doesn't mean the workers of North Carolina are without protections. Federal WARN Act regulations still extend coverage to employees in North Carolina. The state requires employers to submit and issue WARN notices to workers, providing information on anticipated mass layoffs and plant closures, along with details on the number of affected

Some states are not only regulated by the federal WARN Act, like Ohio, Georgia, Arizona, and Florida, but have their own requirements and regulations specified in their so-called mini-WARN Acts. These states include: California, New York, New Jersey, Illinois, and more, all of which you can read about on our blog.

North Carolina's WARN Act protects workers facing layoffs or plant Coordinator, and the chief elected ofclosures. Employers in North Caro- ficial of the local government where notice to employees when aware of impending closures or layoffs. This gives employees sufficient time to explore alternative employment options. But remember, the WARN Act operates independently of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), which establishes guidelines for minimum wage, overtime, and unemployment benefits. Be careful not to confuse the FLSA with the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) in North Carolina!

On a similar note, however, North Carolina holidays are determined both federally, and locally per state. Check out our federal holiday calendar for an updated and complete list.

WARN notices in North Carolina require 60 days' advance notification for employees facing layoffs or plant closures. If union workers are involved, notification is directed to union representatives rather than individual employees. While there's no specific template for the notice, there are a few rules it must follow: it must be in writing, and it must include crucial information such as the site and date of closure or layoffs, reasons for the action, whether the loss is permanent or temporary, affected job titles, unions, and the number of employees, and followup contact information. Employers covered by the act must provide written notice to affected workers, labor unions representing these workers, the State Rapid Response lina are mandated to provide advance the employment site is located. This notice should be delivered at least 60 days before the anticipated plant closing or mass layoff.

> Certain situations trigger the WARN Act in North Carolina. These include the following: 1. Plant closings affecting 50 or more > employees for at least 30 days. 2. Mass layoffs involving at least 500 full-time employees.

> 3. Mass layoffs involving at least 50 full-time employees, constituting 33% or more of the employer's workforce.

> 4. Plant closings or layoffs extended over 90 days.

When an employment site or fa- mass layoff. cility is shut down, resulting in an employment loss for 50 or more employees during a 30-day period.

When a mass layoff occurs that does not result from a plant closing, but leads to an employment loss for 500 or more employees during a 30day period, or for 50-499 employees if they constitute at least 33% of the employer's active workforce.

When the cumulative employment losses for two or more groups of workers, each falling below the minimum threshold for notice, reach the threshold level during any 90-day period for either a plant closing or

In North Carolina, employers are covered by the WARN Act if they have 100 or more employees, excluding those with less than six months of service in the last 12 months or those working an average of less than 20 hours per week. The Act applies to private, for-profit employers, private, nonprofit employers, and public and quasi-public entities operating in a commercial context.

Employees entitled to notice under the WARN Act include hourly and salaried workers, as well as managerial and supervisory employ-

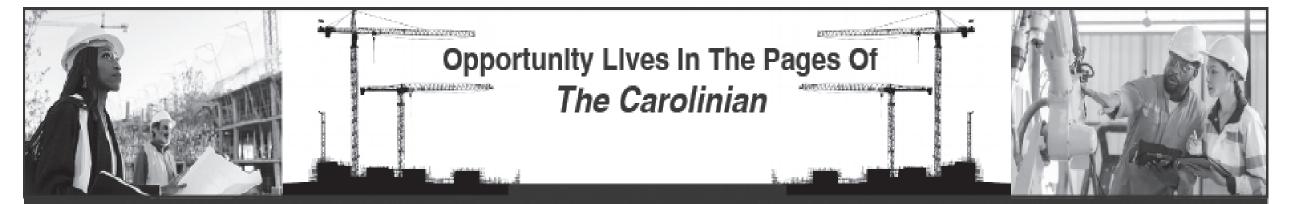

The core focus of WARN Act requirements in North Carolina is on notification, the idea being that employees get sufficient notice to make alternative plans. Employers must provide advance notice before a change in employment affecting lots of employees.

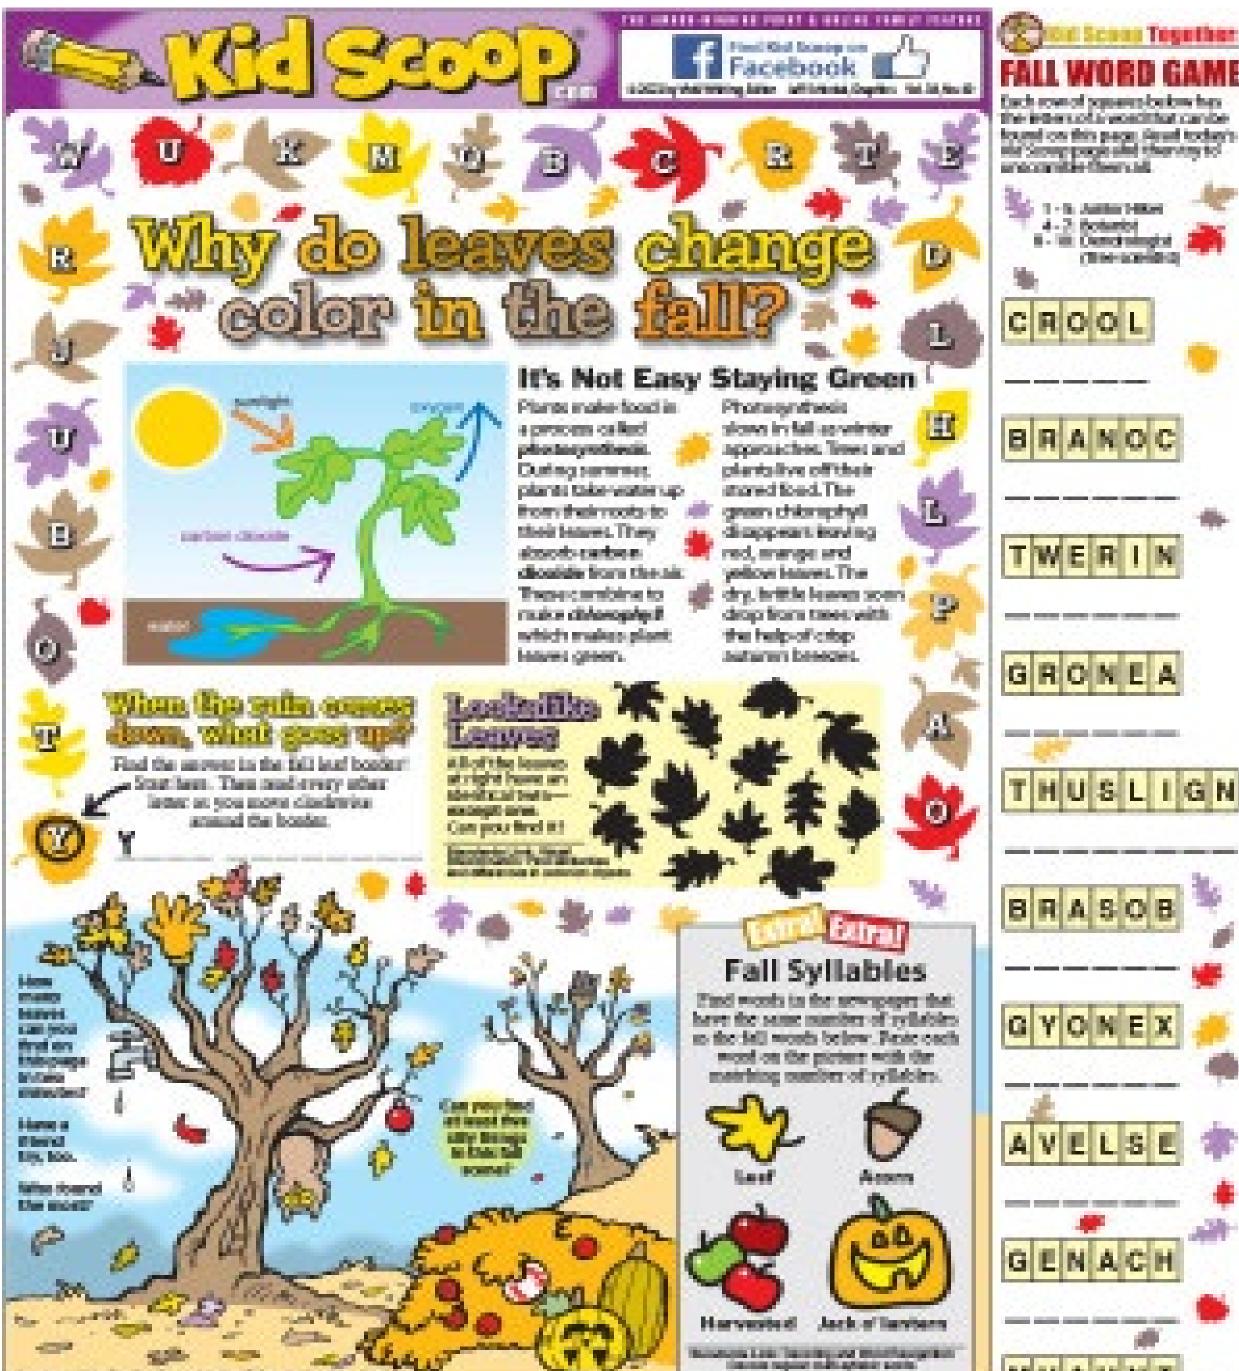

There are recommendations, too, regardless of the law. The state of North Carolina encourages all emplovers to issue a WARN notice. regardless of whether or not they are legally required to do so by meeting the WARN act minimum employee ees. Business partners, however, are threshold or any of the other criteria.

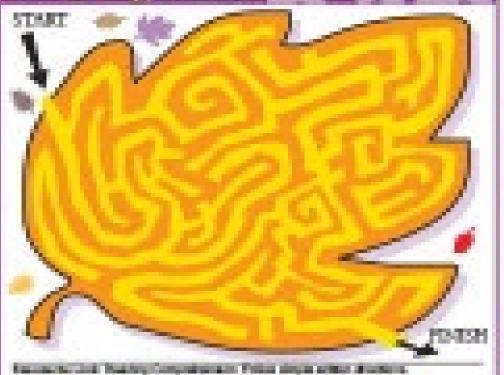

WARN Summary by County/Parish As of 2025-09-22 08:42:37 Eastern Standard Time/EST

[Partial List]

County	Warn Number	Date of Notice	Date Received by NC	Effective Date	WARN Notice: WARN Notice Name	WARN notice type	Type of layoff or closure	Number affected at this location	Address 1	City
Durham County	202500001	1/6/2025	1/6/2025	12/15/2025	Resilience US, Inc.	Layoff	Permanent	120	1733 TW Alexander Dr	Durham
Mecklenburg County	202500002	1/13/2025	1/13/2025	8/29/2025	Eaton	Closure	Permanent	76	5910 Long Creek Park Drive	Charlotte
Rockingham County	202500003	1/13/2025	1/13/2025	3/14/2025	Press Glass, Inc.	Closure	Permanent	68	8901 US-220	Stoneville
Yadkin County	202500004	1/23/2025	1/23/2025	12/31/2025	PVH Corp.	Closure	Permanent	317	1000 PVH Quality Way	Jonesville
Davidson County	202500005	1/24/2025	1/24/2025	5/30/2025	Olon Industries Inc. (US)	Closure	Permanent	53	67 Biesecker Road	Lexington
Randolph County	202500006	1/24/2025	1/27/2025	4/30/2025	Kayser-Roth Corporation	Closure	Permanent	116	515 W. Balfour St.	Asheboro
Mecklenburg County	202500007	1/27/2025	1/27/2025	3/31/2025	Air General, Inc.	Closure	Permanent	99	4706 Yorkmont Road	Charlotte
Durham County	202500008	1/27/2025	1/28/2025	10/24/2025	Charles River Laboratories, Inc.	Closure	Permanent	37	4025 Stirrup Creek Drive	Durham
Rowan County	202500009	1/31/2025	1/31/2025	4/1/2025	General Shale	Closure	Permanent	65	700 S. Long St.	East Spencer
Rockingham County	202500010	2/3/2025	2/3/2025	6/14/2025	Unifi Manufacturing, Inc.	Closure	Permanent	91	805 Island Drive	Madison
Guilford County	202500011	2/3/2025	2/3/2025	4/4/2025	Richloom Weaving, LLC	Closure	Permanent	54	1914 S. Elm Street	High Point
Mecklenburg County	202500012	2/5/2025	2/5/2025	6/13/2025	Walmart	Closure	Permanent	201	2118 Water Ridge Parkway	Charlotte
Anson County	202500013	2/11/2025	2/11/2025	4/11/2025	Darling Ingredients, Inc.	Layoff	Permanent	51	656 Little Duncan Road	Wadesboro
N/A	202500014	2/17/2025	2/17/2025	3/25/2025	Behavioral Health Link	Closure	Permanent	2	1201 Peachtree St NE	Atlanta GA
Alexander County	202500015	2/24/2025	2/24/2025	12/31/2025	TIMKEN	Closure	Permanent	58	1095 McClain Rd	Hiddenite
Mecklenburg County	202500016	3/3/2025	3/4/2025	5/2/2025	UPS	Closure	Permanent	99	1815 W Pointe Drive	Charlotte
Orange County	202500017	3/10/2025	3/11/2025	6/1/2025	American Institutes of Research (AIR)	Layoff	Permanent	15	100 Europa Drive	Chapel Hill
Robeson County	202500018	3/7/2025	3/17/2025	6/30/2025	Sodexo, Inc and Affiliates	Closure	Permanent	156	1 University Drive	Pembroke
N/A	202500019	3/18/2025	3/19/2025	6/30/2025	BH Security LLC d/b/a Brinks Home	Layoff	Permanent	1	1278 Loop Rd	Lancaster PA
Guilford County	202500020	3/21/2025	3/21/2025	5/21/2025	Panera, LLC	Closure	Permanent	80	4225 Tudor Lane	Greensboro

Find the words to the pustle. LEAVES Howevery of them comyon. SHATTER find anothic page? SYDE ARE SO CARSION 包括ASS294 MINTER: SCENE. BORDER: CRISE ARB ACCOUNT GREEN DEARMAR TRONW SUCCETS:

many to the expense frages between

District Life States Springers and

6 School Toyother

1 - 9: Auto 14866 4-2 Sotunios 6-10 Demokratigist

(The schools)

This week's word ABSORB

The west elever's corons to take in or swallow up.

The source was able to alesee's one optilled milk

The to suc the word absorb 26 a sentence today when talking with your friends. and female:

Find five words in the newspaper that

Secretary like September 1979 and the education of the

FALL

DAYS

Eat Like a Plant

Would you like to "set" like a plant—meeting have the water and COO into food through photocrathesis? Wile or wife sait?